Since independence the government has been actively pursuing a policy of small-scale industrialization to compensate for the almost total lack of manufacturing capacity. It has adopted an elaborate state control programme and in late 1976 acquired 80% of the capital of a Portuguese company, Ultramarina, a large firm specializing in a wide variety of trading, ship-repairing and agricultural processing. The government has also acquired major interests in the CICER brewery and created a joint venture company with the Portuguese concern SACOR to sell petroleum products after the construction of new storage facilities. Since 1975 three fishing companies have been set up with foreign participation: GUIALP (with Algeria), Estrela do Mar (with the USSR) and SEMAPESCA (with France). In December 1976 SOCOTRAM, an enterprise for the sale and processing of timber, was inaugurated. It operates a new factory in Bissau for the production of wooden tiles and co-ordinates sawmills and carpentry shops all over the country. The state-owned Empresa Nacional de Pesquisas e Exploração Petroliferas e Mineiras (PETROMINAS) regulates all mineral prospecting. In 1979 the Empresa de Automóveis de Guiné opened an assembly plant at Bissau, capable of producing 500 cars a year.

Transport

RAILWAYS

The construction of a railway from Boé to Buba is planned.

ROADS

There were 2,500 km of roads in 1983, of which 400 km were tarred. A major road rehabilitation scheme is under way, and by the end of 1983, 522 km of roads had been rehabilitated. In 1984 the International Development Association committed US $7m. to Guinea-Bissau for the rehabilitation of a further 920 km of roads An international road is planned, which would link Guinea-Bissau with The Gambia and Senegal.

SHIPPING

Work started in 1984 on a major port modernization project, due to be completed in 1987. The main port at Bissau was to be renovated and expanded, and four river ports were to be upgraded to enable barges to load and unload at low tide. The total cost of the project was estimated at US $47.4m., and finance was provided by the World Bank and Arab funds.

GUYANA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Co-operative Republic of Guyana lies on the north coast of South America, between Venezuela to the west and Suriname to the east, with Brazil to the south. The narrow coastal belt has a moderate climate with two wet seasons, from April to August and from November to January, alternating with two dry seasons. Inland, there are tropical forests and savannah, and the dry season lasts from September to February. The average annual temperature is 27°C (80°F), with average rainfall of 1,520 mm (60 in) per year inland, rising to between 2,030 mm (80 in) and 2,540 mm (100 in) on the coast. English is the official language but Hindi, Urdu and Amerindian dialects are also spoken. The principal religions are Christianity, Hinduism and Islam. The national flag (proportions 5 by 3 when flown on land, but 2 by 1 at sea) is green, with a white-bordered yellow triangle (apex at the edge of the fly) on which is superimposed a black-bordered red triangle (apex in the centre). The capital is Georgetown.

Recent History

Guyana was formerly British Guiana, a colony of the United Kingdom, formed in 1831 from territories finally ceded to Britain by the Dutch in 1814. A new constitution, providing for universal adult suffrage, was introduced in 1953. The elections of April 1953 were won by the left-wing People's Progressive Party (PPP), led by Dr Cheddi Jagan. In October, however, the United Kingdom Government, claiming that a communist dictatorship was threatened, suspended the constitution. An interim administration was appointed. The PPP split in 1955, and in 1957 some former members founded a new party, the People's National Congress (PNC), under the leadership of Forbes Burnham. The PNC draws its support mainly from the African-descended population, while PPP support comes largely from the (Asian-descended) Indian community. Both parties adhere to Marxist-Leninist ideology.

A revised constitution was introduced in December 1956 and fresh elections held in August 1957. The PPP won and Dr Jagan became Chief Minister. Another constitution, providing for internal self-government, was adopted in July 1961. The PPP won the elections in August and Dr Jagan was appointed Premier in September. In the election of December 1964, held under the system of proportional representation which had been introduced in the previous year, the PPP won the largest number of seats in the Legislative Assembly, but not a majority. A coalition government was formed by the PNC and the United Force, with Burnham as Prime Minister. This coalition led the colony to independence, as Guyana, on 26 May 1966.

The PNC won elections in December 1968 and in July 1973, although the results of the latter were disputed by the opposition parties. Guyana became a Co-operative Republic on 23 February 1970, and Arthur Chung was elected non-executive President in March. In May 1976 the PPP, which had boycotted the National Assembly since 1973, offered the Government its 'critical support'. Following a referendum in July 1978, which gave the Assembly power to amend the constitution, elections to the Assembly were postponed for 15 months. The legislature assumed the role of a Constituent Assembly, established in November 1978, to draft a new constitution. In October 1979 elections were postponed for a further year. In October 1980 Forbes Burnham declared himself executive President of Guyana, a new constitution was promulgated, and elections were announced for December. Internal opposition to the PNC Government increased after the assassination in June 1980 of Dr Walter Rodney, leader of the Working People's Alliance (WPA), as the Government was widely believed to have been involved in the incident. After all opposition parties except the PPP called for a boycott of the December elections to the National Assembly, the PNC, under Burnham, won 77.7% of the votes, according to official results, and gained 41 of the 53 elective seats, although allegations of substantial electoral malpractice were made. On the basis of the voting for the Assembly, Burnham was declared to have been elected President. He was formally inaugurated in January 1981. The Government's international reputation was further diminished when an international observer team denounced the elections as fraudulent. In 1981 arrests and trials of opposition leaders continued, and in 1982 the Government's relations with human rights groups, and especially the Christian churches, deteriorated further. Editors of opposition newspapers were threatened, political violence increased, and the Government was accused of interference in the legal process. Popular passive resistance to the Government took the form of economic non-co-operation, while the Government gave much publicity to rumours of an invasion by Venezuela, in an attempt to divert attention from the internal crisis.

In 1983 Guyana's worsening economic situation increased public opposition to the Government, and led to growing disaffection within the trade union movement and the PNC. In April President Burnham announced a Cabinet reshuffle, which was ostensibly intended to raise production levels and to halt the decline in the economy. In June the shortage of basic foodstuffs, created by the Government's import ban on such staples as wheat flour and powdered milk, resulted in a wave of public unrest. In July 4,000 bauxite workers at the principal mining centre of Linden undertook a six-week strike in protest at food shortages. A further source of popular discontent was the Government's severe response to the thriving 'black market' in banned foodstuffs, which operated between Guyana and Venezuela, Brazil and Suriname. A virtual 'freeze' on wages since 1979 has resulted in a fall in income, in real terms, for government employees, and during 1984 anti-Government trade unions conducted strikes in the sugar industry, protesting at wage levels and food shortages. In December 1984 Burnham announced an amelioration of the Government's austerity measures by raising the daily minimum wage, and by promising that more basic consumer items would become available. Speculation about a possible government of national unity, formed by the PNC and the PPP to counter the threat of a right-wing military coup, increased after a series of talks between the two parties.

Guyana condemned the US-led invasion of Grenada in October 1983, a move which, although popular in Guyana, led to rapid deterioration in relations with the USA, which had worsened after the US Government had vetoed anticipated loans to Guyana in September. Guyana's decision to dispense with seeking IMF financial support further compounded the country's increasing isolation among Western nations. In response, Guyana sought to improve relations with socialist countries, such as Cuba, Libya, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Yugoslavia, to compensate for the decline in Western aid. In 1983 President Burnham made official visits to Bulgaria and the People's Republic of China to negotiate aid agreements.

Guyana has border disputes with its neighbours, Venezuela and Suriname, although relations with Brazil have continued to improve through trade and military agreements. In 1962 Venezuela renewed its claim to 130,000 sq km (50,000 sq miles) of land west of the Essequibo river (nearly two-thirds of Guyanese territory). The area was accorded to Guyana in 1899, and the Port of Spain Protocol of 1970 put the issue in abeyance until 1982. Venezuela based its claim on a papal bull of 1493, referring to Spanish colonial possessions. Several border incidents were reported in 1982. Direct negotiations in June failed, and in October Venezuela rejected Guyana's proposal to resolve the dispute through international arbitration. In March 1983 Guyana and Venezuela referred the dispute to the UN. Suriname restored diplomatic representation in Guyana in 1979, and bilateral talks were resumed at the end of the year. In 1983 relations improved further as a result of increased trade links between the countries.

Government

Under the 1980 Constitution, legislative power is held by the unicameral National Assembly, with 65 members: 53 elected for five years by universal adult suffrage, on the basis of proportional representation, and 12 regional representatives. Executive power is held by the President, who leads the majority party in the Assembly and holds office for its duration. The President appoints and leads a Cabinet, which includes a Prime Minister, and may include Ministers who are not elected members of the Assembly. The Cabinet is collectively responsible to the National Assembly. Guyana comprises 10 regions, each having a Regional Democratic Council which returns a representative to the National Assembly.

Defence

The armed forces are combined in a single service, the Guyana Defence Force, consisting of 6,500 men in July 1984. Paramilitary forces total 5,000. Estimated defence expenditure in 1983 was US $60m. National Service was established in 1974.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based mainly on agriculture and the production of bauxite. Bauxite, sugar and rice usually account for about 70% of total export earnings. In 1982, according to estimates by the World Bank, Guyana's gross national product (GNP) per head was US $670, measured at average 1980–82 prices. GNP per head was estimated to have risen by 1.7% per year, in real terms, between 1960 and 1982. The principal crops are sugar cane and rice, while other important agricultural products are citrus fruits, coconuts, groundnuts, oil palms and a variety of vegetables. Since 1982 the agricultural sector has suffered from low productivity and the effects of the ending of government price subsidies. The Government has invested US $45m. in the Mahaica-Mahaicony-Abary agricultural development scheme, which the Government hopes will enable Guyana to supply both itself and other CARICOM countries with food.

By 1979 Guyana had become self-sufficient in sugar, rice, vegetables, fish, meat, poultry and fruit. Sugar accounts for about 30% of export earnings, but since 1982 revenue has fallen because of poor harvests. Production of raw sugar rose from 273,000 metric tons in 1980 to 306,000 tons in 1981, but was still below target levels and far short of the processing capacity of 450,000 tons. Strikes and adverse weather caused the worst first-crop sugar harvest for three years in 1982, and the final production total was 292,000 tons. Two of Guyana's 10 sugar mills were closed in 1982. In 1983 production fell by 12.5%, to 261,870 tons. The industry was again affected by strikes during 1984, when output was only 241,850 tons.

The cultivation of rice in Guyana is highly mechanized but the crop is farmed in uneconomic units of an average of 11 acres (4.5 ha). In 1981 only about one-half of the land available for rice was cultivated, and it was thought that, when subsidies were removed and fuel prices increased, farmers had ceased planting. Production of milled rice in 1981 was 169,000 metric tons, up from 163,000 tons in 1980, but 48,000 tons below target. In 1982 production increased to 182,224 tons, but export sales fell by 50%. Disease and adverse weather severely damaged the 1983 harvest, which, at 80,139 tons, was 107,000 tons below the target. Of the 1983 output, 41,715 tons were exported, an increase from 34,831 tons in 1982. In January 1984 the IDB approved a loan of US $40.7m. to bring 37,000 acres (15,000 ha) of rice land into full production.

More than 80% of Guyana is covered by tropical forest, and the estimated annual volume of marketable timber is 1m. cu m, of which 25% is accessible. The annual production of logs is about 150,000 cu m, taken from an area of 7,000 ha. Guyana's fishing fleet has been improved with the assistance of foreign countries, but has suffered from the illegal sale of shrimps, the main catch, to foreign ships at sea.

Bauxite is Guyana's principal source of export earnings. By the end of 1975 the whole bauxite industry had been nationalized. Production fell from 3.6m. tons in 1973–74 to 1.8m. tons in 1980, and to 1.68m. tons in 1981, 30% below target. In 1982 the industry began to experience difficulties as the price of bauxite collapsed on the world market. In 1982 production fell by 22% to 1.44m. tons. Exports of bauxite were 1.12m. tons in 1983, 380,000 tons less than 1982. In 1983 1,700 workers were laid off, and the country's only refinery was closed. Exports of alumina fell in 1982, owing to reduced demand, and the alumina plant was temporarily closed in June. The state-owned mining company, Guymine, registered a loss of $ G131m. in 1983. Production increased in 1984, to reach 1.55m. tons, achieving output targets. It has been estimated that less than 25% of the gold and diamonds which are mined in Guyana are declared and sold to the Government, the sole legal buyer. In 1984 an IMF report claimed that the country was losing US $1.7m. per week through the smuggling of gold and diamonds. Seventeen mines in the Essequibo region were closed in an attempt to halt the flow of minerals out of the country.

Industry is based on mineral processing, agro-industries (such as the production of rum, beer and cigarettes) and light industry, principally textiles and clothing. Industrial development depends on the expansion of energy sources, and the 750 MW hydroelectric project on the Upper Mazaruni river, scheduled for completion in 1985, should make possible the construction of a local aluminium smelter. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea has agreed to provide technical assistance for a projected 3,000 MW hydroelectric station at Eclipse Falls. In 1984 a major project, financed by the International Development Association, was commenced to investigate Guyana's potential onshore and offshore petroleum deposits.

The economy, in a crisis since the mid-1970s, was on the point of collapse by 1982, as inefficiency, corruption and a decline of managerial and technical skills (as a result of emigration, mainly from the Asian sector) were added to low world prices. The collapse of popular morale was also widely regarded as a fundamental cause of the country's failure to produce. Guyana's relations with other CARICOM members had deteriorated following its violation of a CARICOM trade agreement and its failure to repay large debts to the organization. Guyana's GDP declined by 12.4%, in real terms, in 1982, and by a further 9.6% in 1983. The country's total debt stood at $ G2,625m. in September 1983, and was expected to rise still further to finance the growing budget deficit, estimated at $ G235m. for 1984. Debt servicing in 1984 would require $ G450m., equivalent to 42% of projected export receipts, necessitating debt rescheduling. Imports of cheese, wheat flour, split peas and cooking oil have been prohibited since 1982, while shortages of basic commodities, including eggs, fish, chicken, kerosene, rice and sugar, produced long queues outside shops. In 1983 the price of copra increased by 200%. In 1982 the official inflation rate was 20%–30%, but 100% increases of prices on the 'parallel' market occurred between January and June alone. The restriction of imports, however, has been successful in curbing the trade deficit, which fell from $ G490m. in 1981 to $ G407m. in 1982, although the smuggling of Guyana's products endangers this success. The economy is 80% state-controlled, but in May 1982 the Government began a programme of privatization, although this was officially denied. In 1983 and 1984 co-operation agreements were signed with several foreign companies, including Canadian, Yugoslav and Brazilian mining firms, granting them rights to explore for gold and other minerals in the north-east of the country.

In 1983 the Government faced a major economic crisis as the problem of a severe shortage of convertible currency was compounded by the reluctance of foreign governments to provide loans. The private sector was near to collapse as the foreign currency crisis worsened. Many businesses, especially those dealing in textiles, were forced to close. About 10,000 workers in the state sector were made redundant, adding to the high rate of unemployment. In June the Government expressed its willingness to engage in non-monetary transactions in order to secure vital products. Guyana agreed to barter goods with Suriname and Japan, and made further trade deals with Yugoslavia, the People's Republic of China and Brazil.

The IMF has provided balance-of-payments support and other facilities since 1979, but agreements have lapsed, owing to Guyana's failure to meet IMF conditions. Credits were finally suspended in June 1982. In 1983 the USA vetoed $ G224.4m. in potential aid funds from the US Government and the IDB. Guyana attempted to raise a loan from the IMF in excess of US $176m. Negotiations broke down in May 1984 as Guyana refused to agree to the conditions laid down by the IMF, which included a currency devaluation of 40%–60%, the 'freezing' of wage levels in the public sector and the implementation of large cuts in the Government's current and capital spending, including the removal of food subsidies. By January 1984 the crisis had become so severe that the Government was forced to devalue the Guyana dollar by 20%, and a further devaluation of 8.9% occurred in October.

Guyana is a founder member of the Caribbean Common Market (CARICOM, see p. 112) and the International Bauxite Association (p. 222).

Transport and Communications

The coastal strip has a well developed road system. In the whole country there are more than 4,830 km (3,000 miles) of paved and good-weather roads and trails. Long-distance buses link the principal towns, villages and sugar estates. Communications with the interior are still chiefly by river, although access is hindered by rapids and falls. The main rivers are the Mazaruni, the Potaro, the Essequibo, the Demerara and the Berbice. There are two railways which transport minerals and freight in the mining areas. Neither of the two caters for passengers. The more important settlements in the interior have airstrips, and the international airport is situated at Timehri, 42 km (26 miles) outside Georgetown.

Social Welfare

Improved water supplies, anti-tuberculosis campaigns and the control of malaria have steadily improved general health. A National Insurance scheme, compulsory for most workers and employers, was established in 1969, and was subsequently extended to cover self-employed people. In 1979 there were 85 physicians in government service. In 1981 Guyana had 29 hospitals and 149 health centres.

Education

Education is free and compulsory for children between five and 14 years of age. The estimated adult literacy rate is 90%. In 1976 the Government took over all church and private schools. In 1983 Guyana had 368 nursery, 423 primary, 30 secondary and community high, and 58 general secondary schools. Children receive secondary education either in a general secondary school for five years or stay on at primary school for a further three years. Enrolment at all primary and secondary schools in 1980 was equivalent to 77% of children aged six to 17. The total number of pupils in all schools was 233,723 in 1983. There are also 15 technical, vocational, special and higher educational institutions. These include the University of Guyana in Georgetown and three teacher training colleges.

Tourism

Despite the beautiful scenery in the interior of the country, Guyana does little to encourage tourism. Tours to the interior, including the famous Kaieteur falls (with a drop of 741 ft or 226 m) and the diamond fields at Kurupung on the Mazaruni river, may be arranged.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 2 July (Caribbean Day), 6 August (Freedom Day), 27 August (Eid-ul-Azha), 25 November (Youman-Nabi), 25, 26 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 23 February (Republic Day), 28–31 March (Easter).

In addition, the Hindu festivals of Holi Phagwah (March) and Divali (October) are celebrated. These festivals are dependent on sightings of the moon and their precise date is not known until two months before they take place.

Directory

The Constitution

Guyana became a republic, within the Commonwealth, on 23 February 1970. A new Constitution was promulgated on 6 October 1980. Its main provisions are summarized below:

The Constitution declares the Co-operative Republic of Guyana to be an indivisible, secular, democratic sovereign state in the course of transition from capitalism to socialism. The bases of the political, economic and social system are political and economic independence, involvement of citizens and socio-economic groups, such as co-operatives and trade unions, in the decision-making processes of the state and in management, social ownership of the means of production, national economic planning and co-operativism as the principle of socialist transformation. Personal property, inheritance, the right to work, with equal pay for men and women engaged in equal work, free medical attention, free education and social benefits for old age and disability are guaranteed. Individual political rights are subject to the principles of national sovereignty and democracy, and freedom of expression to the state's duty to ensure fairness and balance in the dissemination of information to the public. Relations with other countries are guided by respect for human rights, territorial integrity and non-intervention.

THE PRESIDENT

The President is the supreme executive authority, head of state and Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, elected for a term of office, usually of five years' duration, with no limit on re-election. The successful presidential candidate is the nominee of the party with the largest number of votes in the legislative elections. The President may prorogue or dissolve the National Assembly (in the case of dissolution, fresh elections must be held immediately) and has discretionary powers to postpone elections for up to one year at a time for up to five years. He may be removed from office on medical grounds, or for violation of the Constitution (with a two-thirds majority vote of the Assembly), or for gross misconduct (with a three-quarters majority vote of the Assembly if allegations are upheld by a tribunal).

The President appoints a First Vice-President and Prime Minister who must be an elected member of the National Assembly, and a Cabinet of Ministers, which includes non-elected members and is collectively responsible to the legislature. The President also appoints a Minority Leader, who is the elected member of the Assembly deemed by the President most able to command the support of the opposition.

THE LEGISLATURE

The legislative body is a unicameral National Assembly of 65 members; 53 members are elected by universal adult suffrage in a system of proportional representation, 10 members are elected by the 10 regional democratic councils and two members are elected by the National Congress of Local Democratic Organs. The Assembly passes bills, which are then presented to the President, and may pass constitutional amendments.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Guyana is divided into 10 regions, each having a regional democratic council elected for a term of up to five years and four months, although it may be prematurely dissolved by the President. Local councillors elect from among themselves deputies to the National Congress of Democratic Organs. This Congress and the National Assembly together form the Supreme Congress of the People of Guyana, a deliberative body which may be summoned, dissolved or prorogued by the President and is automatically dissolved along with the National Assembly.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Impartial commissions exist for the judiciary, the public service and the police service. An Ombudsman is appointed, after consultation between the President and the Minority Leader, to hold office for four years.

Judicial System

The Judicature of Guyana comprises the Supreme Court of Judicature, which consists of a Court of Appeal and a High Court (both of which are superior courts of record), and a number of Courts of Summary Jurisdiction.

The Court of Appeal consists of the Chancellor as President, the Chief Justice, and such number of Justices of Appeal as may be prescribed by the National Assembly. This Court came into operation in June 1966.

The High Court of the Supreme Court consists of the Chief Justice as President of the Court and Puisne Judges. Its jurisdiction is both original and appellate. It has criminal jurisdiction in matters brought before it on indictment. A person convicted by the Court has a right of appeal to the Guyana Court of Appeal. The High Court of the Supreme Court has unlimited jurisdiction in civil matters and exclusive jurisdiction in probate, divorce and admiralty and certain other matters. Under certain circumstances, appeal in civil matters lies either to the Full Court of the High Court of the Supreme Court, which is composed of not less than two judges, or to the Guyana Court of Appeal.

A magistrate has jurisdiction to determine claims where the amount involved does not exceed $ G1,500. Appeal lies to the Full Court.

HAITI

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Haiti occupies the western part of the Caribbean island of Hispaniola (the Dominican Republic occupies the remaining two-thirds) and some smaller off-shore islands. Cuba, to the west, is less than 80 km away. The climate is tropical but the mountains and fresh sea winds mitigate the heat. Temperatures vary little with the seasons, and the annual average in Port-au-Prince is about 27°C (80°F). The rainy season is from May to November. The official language is French but a Creole dialect is generally spoken. About 80% of the population belong to the Roman Catholic Church, the country's official religion, and other Christian churches are also represented. A form of witchcraft, known as voodoo, is the folk religion. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has two equal vertical stripes, of black and red. The state flag has, in addition, a white rectangular panel, containing the national coat of arms (a palm tree, flanked by flags and cannons), in the centre. The capital is Port-au-Prince.

Recent History

Haiti was first colonized in 1659 by the French, who named the island Saint-Domingue. A successful uprising between 1791 and 1803 by African-descended slaves established the country in 1804 as an independent state, ruled by Jean-Jacques Dessalines, who proclaimed himself Emperor of Haiti. Hostility between the negro population and the mulattos continued throughout the 19th century until, after increasing political instability, the USA intervened militarily and ruled the country from 1915 to 1934. Thereafter, mulatto presidents were in power until 1946, when a negro president, Dusmarsais Estimé, took over. He was overthrown in 1950 by a military coup led by another negro, Gen. Paul Magloire, who was himself forced to resign in 1956. In 1957 Dr François Duvalier, a country physician, was elected President.

Despite a promising start, the Duvalier administration soon became a dictatorship, maintaining its authority by means of a notorious private army called the Tontons Macoutes (Creole for 'Bogeymen'), later renamed the National Security Volunteers, who used extortion and intimidation to crush all possible opposition to the President's rule. In 1964 Duvalier's tenure was changed to that of President-for-Life, and he retained almost total power over the country, by means of violence and voodoo threats, until his death in April 1971. In January 1971 the Constitution was amended to allow Duvalier to nominate his successor. He promptly named his son, Jean-Claude Duvalier, who became President, at 19 years of age, on the day of his father's death.

The release of political prisoners and an amelioration of conditions, including the appointment of more moderate Cabinet ministers, indicated that the regime was slightly more humane than its predecessor, with the increasing need for international aid pressuring the Government to take notice of human rights agencies and critical donor countries. Elections took place in February 1979 for the 58-seat National Assembly. As 57 of the seats were won by the official government party, the Parti de l'Unité Nationale (PUN), demonstrations took place against alleged ballot-rigging. In November the Cabinet was again reshuffled to include some more 'hard-line' elements, but the need for international aid, following drought and famine in 1979 and 1980, forced President Duvalier to reverse this measure in April 1980.

In mid-1979 three illegal Christian Democratic opposition parties were formed by critics of the Duvalier regime. In October 1979 a new press law was introduced, banning any criticism of the President, or of government or security officials, and any articles or broadcasts deemed to be subversive. The rearrest in October 1980 of Sylvio Claude, the leader of the Parti Démocratique Chrétien d'Haïti (PDCH), for alleged subversion was followed in November and December by more than 400 arrests of opposition politicians, journalists and broadcasters. Leading opponents of the regime were deported. Claude was sentenced to 15 years' hard labour in August 1981. Foreign criticism forced a retrial at which the sentence was reduced to six years, and in September 1982 Claude was released into house arrest, from which he subsequently escaped.

The first municipal elections for 25 years were held in 1983. President Duvalier had promised in April 1982 that they would be 'free, honest and democratic'. In the event, all the opposition candidates for the politically sensitive Port-au-Prince posts were arrested just before the polls. In the provincial constituencies allegations of ballot-rigging were made. On 27 August the Assembly was dissolved when the Constitution was amended, reaffirming, however, the Presidency-for-Life and Duvalier's right to name his successor. Elections for the Assembly were held on 12 February 1984. All 59 seats were won by the pro-Duvalier party, PUN, as no opposition candidates were allowed. Although, during March and April, President Duvalier had publicized his intention of observing human rights and the freedom of the press, a decree of 10 May subsequently banned all political activity and opposition newspapers. Several journalists who had prepared publications critical of the Government were arrested, and their printing presses closed down. Opposition politicians went into hiding or were placed under house arrest. In May and June there were spontaneous outbreaks of rioting in the northern towns of Cap Haïtien and Gonaïves, and in a number of other rural towns, provoked by government corruption and the non-distribution of food aid. A Cabinet reshuffle at the end of May resulted in the dismissal of Ministers who were held responsible for the rioting, and a further reshuffle in August helped to strengthen the power of 'hard-line' elements within the Government, especially that of Dr Roger Lafontant, the Minister of State for the Interior and National Defence. More arrests were made in November, in response to an alleged plot against the Government.

Under an agreement between the Haitian and US Governments to curb the influx of illegal Haitian immigrants into southern Florida (an estimated 20,000 made the crossing in 1980), which was continuing in 1981 at the rate of around 4,000 per month, a US coastguard cutter began patrolling the Windward passage in October 1981 to intercept boats carrying refugees and to return them to Haiti. In 1982 only a tiny percentage of Haitians were granted political asylum in the USA, while the majority were imprisoned or returned to Haiti.

Attempts by Haitian exile groups to overthrow the Duvalier regime have been weak and ineffectual. In January 1982 Government forces dispersed a small group of dissidents who had seized a military outpost on Ile de la Tortue as part of a much-publicized invasion attempt.

International relations, although improved since 1971, continue to be strained because of Haiti's unpopular political regime and government corruption. Haiti's relations with the USA, its principal ally, deteriorated during 1984, owing to US concern over violations of human rights within the country. Relations between Haiti and its neighbour on the island of Hispaniola, the Dominican Republic, have traditionally been tense because of the use of the border area by anti-government guerrillas, smugglers and illegal emigrants, resulting in the periodic closure of the border. Haiti is a member of the OAS (see p. 191).

Government

The President has absolute power, holds office for life and may nominate his successor. He governs with the assistance of an appointed Cabinet. The unicameral legislative chamber has 59 members, elected for six years by universal adult suffrage. There are nine Départements, subdivided into arrondissements and communes.

Defence

In July 1984 Haiti had a defence force with a total strength of about 6,800, including two companies of commando-type troops known as the Léopards. The army of 6,300 men includes a Presidential Guard. The navy comprises a coastguard patrol of 300 men and 15 vessels, and there is an air force of about 200. There is also a paramilitary police force of 14,900. Estimated defence expenditure in 1983 was US $20m.

Economic Affairs

In terms of average income, Haiti is the poorest country in the western hemisphere. In 1982, according to estimates by the World Bank, Haiti's gross national product (GNP) per head, measured at average 1980–82 prices, was US $300, well below the level of any other country in Latin America. Even this low income is unevenly distributed. In the mid-1970s the richest 5% of the population accounted for about 50% of Haiti's total GNP. It is estimated that the average annual growth of GNP per head, in real terms, was only 0.6% between 1960 and 1982. In the 1970–80 decade alone, however, it increased by 1.8% annually. The overall growth of gross domestic product (GDP) averaged only 0.2% per year (less than the rate of population increase) in 1960–70, but it rose to 3.4% in 1970–82. Pressures on the economy led to a growth rate in GDP of only 0.5% in 1981, and a decline of 0.1% in 1982. However, the economy recovered and was estimated to have grown by 3% in 1984, with further growth anticipated.

More than 60% of the labour force work in agriculture. Haiti's principal commercial crop, and its major export commodity, is coffee. However, the yields from coffee have been poor in recent years. Efforts to increase agricultural productivity, through the improvement of power, transportation and irrigation, are hindered by deforestation and soil erosion. Cuts in public spending have caused the suspension of many rural development projects. In 1982/83 Haiti's exports of coffee were valued at US $51m., accounting for 26.9% of total export earnings. The destruction of more than one-half of the coffee crop by Hurricane Allen in 1980, coinciding with falling world prices, led to a decline of 61% in export earnings between September 1980 and September 1981. Coffee production rose during 1983, but failed to reach pre-1980 levels. Drought in 1982 and 1983 affected the production of important staple food crops, such as maize, rice and beans, although production of sugar cane and sweet potatoes increased. Cocoa and sisal are the other major crops grown for export. Livestock is raised for internal consumption, and for limited export, but the country's entire population of pigs was destroyed because of infection by African swine fever. The use of charcoal as the country's main energy source is rapidly causing the deforestation of mountain sides, leading to serious problems of soil erosion. Two hydroelectric dams have been built in the Artibonite valley, but they supply electricity only to Port-au-Prince.

The mining of bauxite in Haiti, which used to produce about 600,000 metric tons annually, ceased in 1983, owing to the low international demand for aluminium. Industry employs about 6.5% of the labour force, and contributes 20% of GDP. An industrial zone has been set up outside Port-au-Prince, and more than 300 companies, mostly from the USA, have built factories there. Processing industries, attracted by a cheap labour force (minimum daily wage US $2.65) and the lack of legislation to protect workers, include the assembly of sophisticated electronic equipment, clothes and other goods for the US market. Trade is largely with the USA, although the EEC countries, especially France, are now significant trading partners. The benefits for US companies of the US Government's Caribbean Basin Initiative (CBI) have provided an additional incentive: the value of exports of assembled goods to the USA increased from US $107m. in 1978/79 to $187.4m. in 1982/83. Tourism is a major source of foreign exchange, and an important sector of the economy. In 1982/83 the total number of arrivals, including cruise passengers, was 221,094, a rise after the decline of the previous two years. Unemployment is widespread, especially in the rural areas, causing migration to the towns, in particular to Port-au-Prince, where the population has doubled in 10 years, placing a severe strain on the capital's resources.

Haiti is a major beneficiary of international aid organizations, and up to 75% of its budget is financed by foreign donors. Since 1981 disbursement of aid has been increasingly accompanied by demands for an end to administrative corruption and for an improvement in social and political conditions. The US Government provided US $44.6m. in aid (representing 24% of Haiti's budget), half of which was in the form of food aid, in 1983/84, and has asked the US Congress to approve a package of $54m. for 1984/85. The Federal Republic of Germany provided $10.8m. in financial and technical aid for 1984/85. Food aid is constantly supplied by the FAO, and some 'food for work' schemes have been introduced. The World Bank approved a 50-year credit of US $19.1m. to continue a rural development project in northern Haiti to benefit small farmers. The credit was to be interest-free, and a 10-year grace period was included.

Haiti has recorded a trade deficit every year since 1965. In 1981 this was extremely high (US $209m.), owing to the fall in exports after Hurricane Allen. The IMF provided compensatory financing, and in 1982 agreed to provide support of SDR 34.5m. over a two-year period. The conditions that were imposed by the IMF included cuts in government expenditure. In 1983 the trade deficit declined to US $127.7m., owing to curbs on imports. About one-half of government revenue, which totalled $169.2m. in 1982/83, derives from customs duties. Haiti's public debt is low in comparison with other Latin American countries, since a large proportion of the budget is provided by grant aid and concessionary loans. Inflation, estimated at 18.7% in 1981, fell to 6.5% in 1983, helped by the recovery of the US economy. It has been calculated that remittances from Haitians living and working abroad contribute about US $60m. annually to the economy.

Transport and Communications

An all-weather road from Port-au-Prince to Cap Haïtien, on the northern coast, has been completed with finance from the World Bank. Another major road, connecting Port-au-Prince with Jacmel, has been built and financed by France. Haiti has also received a $15m. credit from the IDA for the reconstruction and upgrading of roads, the rebuilding of two major bridges and the development of port facilities at Port-au-Prince and two other ports. The only railway is run by the Haitian American Sugar Company. There are regular scheduled cargo and mail services to the USA, Caribbean ports and Latin America, operated by the national airline. The principal airport is 16 km outside Port-au-Prince, and is served by international and internal services.

Social Welfare

Industrial and commercial workers are provided with free health care. In 1978 Haiti had 57 hospital establishments, with a total of 3,896 beds, and in 1979 there were 600 physicians in government service. Public health received an allocation of 89.5m. gourdes for 1984/85.

Education

Education is free and is provided by the state, the Roman Catholic Church and missionary churches in nursery schools, elementary schools, secondary schools (including 21 lycées) and the State University. In 1984/85 the budget allocation for education was 96.3m. gourdes. Education is compulsory for children between six and 12 years of age but, owing to lack of facilities and staff, only about 40% of children aged seven to 12 (42% of boys, 38% of girls) attended primary school in 1981. Enrolment at secondary schools in 1981 was equivalent to 13% of children aged 13 to 18. Basic adult education in Creole dialect is being undertaken in rural areas, where about 85% of all adults are illiterate. The University of Haiti provides higher education in law, sciences and medicine.

Tourism

Haiti's bays, beaches, mountains, folklore and primitive art are of interest to tourists. Another attraction is the magnificent 19th-century citadel and palace of King Henry Christophe. Tourism is Haiti's second largest source of foreign exchange. About 45% of tourists are from the USA.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 16 May (Ascension Day), 18 May (Flag Day), 22 May (National Sovereignty), 6 June (Corpus Christi), 21 June (National Thanksgiving Day), 22 June (President's Day), 15 August (Assumption), 17 October (Death of Jean-Jacques Dessalines), 1 November (All Saints' Day), 2 November (All Souls' Day, half day), 18 November (Army Day), 5 December (Discovery Day), 25 December (Christmas Day).

1986: 1 January (National Day), 2 January (Heroes of Independence), 11 February (Carnival), 28–31 March (Easter).

Directory

The Constitution

A new Constitution for the Republic of Haiti was promulgated in 1950. The Constitution was radically revised in 1957, 1964, 1971 and 1983.

PRESIDENT

The President is Head of State for life and has the right to nominate his successor. The President is assisted by a Cabinet, consisting of Ministers, and an Inner Cabinet of Ministers of State. Each Ministry also has a Secretary of State. All appointments are made by the President, who may also vary the numbers in the Cabinet. In cases of grave conflict, the President may dismiss the National Assembly and Cabinet, and govern by decree.

LEGISLATURE

In April 1961 the two houses of the legislature were amalgamated into one, with a National Assembly consisting of 59 deputies who are elected for six years. Voting is by universal adult suffrage, and the minimum voting age is 18 years.

JUDICATURE

There is a Supreme Court, called the Court of Cassation, and subordinate courts.

HONDURAS

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Honduras lies in the middle of the Central American isthmus. It has a long northern coastline on the Caribbean Sea and a narrow southern outlet to the Pacific Ocean. Its neighbours are Guatemala to the west, El Salvador to the south-west and Nicaragua to the south-east. The climate ranges from temperate in the mountainous regions to tropical in the coastal plains. The rainy season is from May to November. The national language is Spanish. Almost all of the inhabitants profess Christianity, and the overwhelming majority are adherents of the Roman Catholic Church. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three horizontal stripes, of blue, white and blue, with five blue five-pointed stars, arranged in a diagonal cross, in the centre of the white stripe. The capital is Tegucigalpa, DC.

Recent History

Honduras was ruled by Spain from the 16th century until independence in 1821, when the Federation of Central America was formed. Honduras emerged as an independent state in 1838. Between 1939 and 1949 the country was ruled as a dictatorship by Gen. Tiburcio Carías Andino, leader of the Partido Nacional (PN). He was succeeded by Juan Manuel Gálvez. In 1954 the leader of the Partido Liberal de Honduras (PLH), Dr José Ramón Villeda Morales, was elected President but was immediately deposed by Julio Lozano Díaz, himself overthrown by a military junta in 1956. The junta organized elections in 1957, when the PLH secured a majority in Congress and Dr Villeda Morales was re-elected President for a six-year term. He was overthrown in 1963 by Col (later Brig.-Gen.) Oswaldo López Arellano, the Minister of Defence, who, following elections held on the basis of a new constitution, was appointed President in June 1965.

A presidential election in March 1971 was won by Dr Ramón Ernesto Cruz Uclés, the PN candidate, who took office in June. However, popular discontent over government austerity measures and delayed land reforms culminated in a bloodless coup, led by the former President, Gen. López Arellano, in December 1972. A group of young army officers, in favour of social reform, took control of the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces, and in March 1974 replaced President López Arellano as Commander-in-Chief of the Army by Col (later Gen.) Juan Melgar Castro, who was appointed President in April 1975. In 1976 the President postponed the 1977 elections until 1979. He was forced to resign by the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces in August 1978, being replaced by a military junta comprising the commanders-in-chief of the army, air force and national police. The army commander, Gen. Policarpo Paz García, assumed the role of Head of State, and the junta promised that elections would be held.

Military rule was ended officially when, in April 1980, elections to a Constituent Assembly were held. The PLH won 52% of the votes but was unable to assume power. General Paz was appointed interim President for one year and, as the armed forces were allowed to nominate four members of the coalition Cabinet, the PLH was in a minority. A general election in November 1981 resulted in a victory for the PLH, led by Dr Roberto Suazo Córdova, which gained an absolute majority in the National Assembly. Dr Suazo was sworn in as President in January 1982. However, the country's military leaders retained control of security decisions and were able to veto Cabinet appointments. Real power rested in the hands of Gen. Gustavo Alvarez, the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, who rejected the previous policy of neutrality regarding regional conflicts, and engaged his troops in operations against guerrilla forces in El Salvador. His plans for a major offensive against Nicaragua in August 1982 were thwarted by US opposition. In November Gen. Alvaraz succeeded in amending the Constitution in order to diminish government control over the armed forces. Political unrest increased, trade union activists and left-wing sympathizers were arrested, and the appearance of 'death squads' was reported. Several power stations were damaged by bombs.

Political tensions were increased by the presence of about 35,000 refugees from neighbouring countries in 1982. It was thought that Honduran troops were responsible for the deaths of several hundred Salvadorean refugees, and that refugee camps for Miskito Indians from Nicaragua were being used by former Nicaraguan National Guards, regarded by the Nicaraguan Government as counter-revolutionaries ('Contras'), as bases for attacks on Nicaragua.

In January 1983 President Suazo survived a major challenge to his administration, following the defection of six PLH deputies to a new alliance grouping within the National Assembly. Three deputies were persuaded to return to the PLH and another was dismissed, thereby narrowly averting a defeat for the ruling party. As a result of this incident, public support for the administration was thought to be in decline. By contrast, Gen. Alvarez continued to enjoy extensive influence over the Government. He keenly supported US policy in Central America and favoured further Honduran involvement in the conflict along the border with Nicaragua. In September an air and sea battle with Nicaraguan forces was reported, and there were frequent accusations from both sides of cross-border incursions. In an attempt to eradicate all forms of internal dissent, Gen. Alvarez organized a campaign of repression against trade unions and small left-wing parties. By June, 11 people had been murdered and four had disappeared. The army won an important victory over left-wing guerrilla forces in October, when 100 guerrillas were killed in an ambush at Olancho.

Throughout 1983, US involvement in Honduras increased substantially. In February the USA and Honduras began a series of joint manoeuvres, known as 'Big Pine', which were anticipated to continue until 1988. The manoeuvres were considered to be a cover to enable the USA to construct permanent military installations in Honduras. A naval base was under construction at Puerto Castilla, while a further two airstrips and radar stations were built in 1983. The US Central Intelligence Agency continued to be active in both covert and overt operations against the Nicaraguan Government, and there was clear evidence that Honduras and the USA provided assistance to Nicaraguan counter-revolutionaries who were based in Honduras. In January 1984 a US military helicopter was shot down in the border zone.

In March 1984 Gen. Alvarez was ousted from power by a group of junior officers. He was subsequently sent into exile. His dismissal was thought to be the result of growing disenchantment among the armed forces with the General's authoritarian policies. Several other high-ranking officers were also sent abroad. The appointment of Gen. Walter López Reyes as his successor was approved by the National Assembly. For the US Government, the departure of Gen. Alvarez represented the loss of its main ally within the Honduran administration. In response to mounting public opposition to the US military presence, the Government indicated its intention to examine its role within the US Government's policy towards Central America. In August the Government suspended the training of Salvadorean troops by US military advisers in Honduras, pending agreement with El Salvador on disputed territory. In addition, the Government called for the establishment of a joint US-Honduran commission to review military and economic co-operation, and to revise the 1954 military agreement between the two countries. It was thought that the Government would seek a security pact and increased economic aid from the USA as conditions for the US military presence in Honduras. In December the US Government, prompted by the deterioration in its relations with Honduras, held talks with the Honduran Government. Further discussions were planned for 1985.

In May 1984 relations with Nicaragua reached their lowest level, following the shooting-down over Nicaraguan territory of a Honduran helicopter. In the following months, however, the Government indicated its concern at the disruptive presence of the 'Contras', who were held responsible by the authorities for violations of human rights within Honduras. In January 1985 Steadman Fagoth Müller, a Miskito Indian leader from Nicaragua, was deported from Honduras.

In August 1984 division within the PLH, coupled with the continuing economic decline, resulted in a Cabinet reshuffle in which four Ministers were replaced. In November a plot by exiled Honduran businessmen to assassinate President Suazo and to overthrow his Government was uncovered in the USA. A presidential election was due to be held in November 1985.

Honduras has a border dispute with El Salvador over the island of Meanguera, in the Gulf of Fonseca, and several small stretches of the land border. In 1969 the dispute provoked a four-day war between the two countries. In 1980 a peace treaty was drawn up, but the 1983 Salvadorean Constitution renews El Salvador's claim to Meanguera. If the claim is upheld, Honduras will be deprived of its only outlet to the Pacific Ocean.

Government

Prior to the elections of November 1981, the 1965 Constitution was revised by the Constituent Assembly. Under the amended provisions, the party winning the most votes in legislative elections appoints the President, usually the party leader. The President holds executive power and has a four-year mandate. Legislative power is vested in the National Assembly, with 82 members elected by universal adult suffrage for a term of four years. A new constitution was promulgated in January 1982.

Defence

Military service is by conscription. Active service lasts eight months, with subsequent reserve training. In July 1984 the armed forces totalled 17,200 men, of whom 15,500 were in the army, 500 in the navy and 1,200 in the air force. Paramilitary forces numbered 4,500 men. Defence expenditure in 1982 was 120m. lempiras. In 1984 Honduras received military aid from the US Government, amounting to US $62.5m.

Economic Affairs

In 1982, according to estimates by the World Bank, the country's gross national product (GNP) per head, measured at average 1980–82 prices, was US $660. Apart from Haiti and Bolivia, Honduras had the lowest level of average income in Latin America. Between 1960 and 1982, it was estimated, GNP per head increased, in real terms, at an average rate of 1.0% annually. In the 1970–80 decade alone, the average annual growth in real GNP per head was only 0.5%. The overall increase in gross domestic product (GDP) averaged 5.2% per year in 1960–70, slowing to 4.2% per year in 1970–82.

Agriculture is the principal sector of the economy, accounting for 26% of the country's GDP in 1983. More than one-half of the country's working population are engaged in the agricultural sector. Agriculture has suffered from low world prices for principal exports, but since 1982 a modest recovery has been taking place. In 1983 the sector grew by 2.5%. Bananas are the leading export and, together with coffee, timber and meat, account for 65% of all export earnings. The banana crop accounted for 30% of total exports in 1983, with an export value of $203m. Low world prices and reduced export quotas led to a decline in coffee earnings by 36% in 1981, when exports fell to $172m. Exports declined to $153m. in 1982, and to $151m. in 1983. Honduras' export quota was cut by 16.3% in 1983. In 1984 fears were expressed that the coffee industry was facing a severe crisis, as 90% of plantations were affected by coffee rust. The sugar industry has been operating at less than 60% of capacity, but export earnings rose from $17.8m. in 1982 to $32m. in 1983. The output of raw sugar increased from 226,306 metric tons in 1982/83 to 233,500 tons in 1983/84.

Forests cover nearly 45% of the land area, and wood is the fourth largest export. A US $600m. forestry project at Olancho, involving the construction of three sawmills and a pulp and paper plant, was expected greatly to increase exports of wood and its derivatives by 1983. The project was adversely affected in 1980 by fires which destroyed a total of 44,000 ha of woodland throughout the country. Receipts from silver and lead mining declined in 1981. Gold and zinc are also mined, and there are deposits of copper and low-grade iron ore. In 1983 foreign companies were drilling for petroleum. The 292,000 kW hydroelectric plant at El Cajón was due to come 'on stream' in late 1985. It was hoped that the plant would save Honduras about $20m. per year in imports of petroleum.

Although industrial activity is still a small part of the economy, the sector grew by 20% in 1979, with development mainly in the San Pedro Sula area. By 1982, however, industry was contracting rapidly and growth had fallen to 1.7%; 87 factories closed in that year, while many others were working at 50% of capacity. From the record figure of US $319.5m. in 1980, industrial exports fell by 8.6% in 1981 and by 14.6% in 1982. In 1983 the manufacturing sector accounted for 15.2% of GDP and employed 13.3% of the country's work-force. The sector has suffered from insufficient investment, a shortage of foreign exchange, a lack of spare parts, and depressed overall demand from the Central American Common Market (CACM, see p. 114), which Honduras joined in 1960.

In January 1975 Honduras adopted a new law concerning agrarian reform, aiming at the distribution of 600,000 ha of land to 100,000 families by 1980. However, only about one-third of the land had actually been expropriated, and still less redistributed, by 1979, when lack of funds and pressure from landowners virtually halted the programme indefinitely. In 1983 the President undertook to transfer 40,813 ha to 507 peasant groups. However, there are still an estimated 150,000 landless peasant families in Honduras.

Increased agricultural production accounted for average real growth in GDP of about 7% per year between 1975 and 1980, but in 1981 low commodity prices and high petroleum prices and interest rates resulted in growth of only 0.5%. GDP declined by 1.2% in 1982, and by a further 0.7% in 1983. Living standards fell sharply as the population continued to expand at about 3% annually. In 1984 unemployment was estimated to exceed 24%; under-employment was estimated to be 57%.

Political developments in the region have eroded the confidence of the private sector and discouraged foreign creditors. The flight of capital from Honduras amounted to US $500m. between 1979 and 1982. Reserves of foreign exchange declined from $237.8m. in March 1980 to $71.8m. in July 1982. By December 1984 they stood at $111m. The scarcity of foreign exchange resulted in fuel shortages. The budget deficit was $61m. at the end of 1981. The current balance-of-payments deficit in 1980 and 1981 was more than $300m., but it fell substantially in 1982 to $228m., principally as a result of reduced imports. In 1982 imports fell by 25.2%, to $718m., and exports fell by 13.2%, to $654m. The foreign debt was $1,600m. in 1983 and was expected to increase to $2,000m. in 1984. A stand-by credit of $150m. was agreed with the IMF in October 1982. Under the terms of the agreement, strict controls were to be imposed on mismanaged state-owned corporations, and incentives were to be given to the private sector and to attract foreign capital. In November 1983 the IMF suspended the disbursement of credit amounting to $15.3m., as Honduras had failed to meet the terms of the 1982 agreement. In May 1984, following further negotiations with the IMF, the Government announced a programme of austerity measures, including increases in direct taxes and reductions in planned expenditure. As a result of the Government's action, the US Government disbursed $65m. in aid. In June, however, public protests at the austerity measures, coupled with the threat of a general strike, prompted the Government to suspend its programme. Talks with the IMF were expected to resume in late 1985, and an agreement on further credits was anticipated in 1986. In 1984 financing of $57m. was obtained from the Federal German Government and the IDB. Economic aid from the USA totalled $134.8m. in 1984.

Transport and Communications

In 1984 there were 1,780 km of railways, located entirely in the north and used mainly to carry bananas, wood and grain to the ports. Many areas are accessible only by air but the road network has been greatly improved in recent years. In 1982 the total length of roads was 9,042 km, including 1,989 km of paved roads. An IDB loan of US $25.2m. was negotiated in 1980 to reconstruct the Tela–La Ceiba road, damaged by floods in 1979, and to provide secondary roads for the Olancho pulp and paper enterprise. There are three international airports, serving Tegucigalpa, La Ceiba and San Pedro Sula. A new seaport at San Lorenzo was opened in 1979, and the port at Puerto Castilla, to serve the Olancho forestry project, was completed in 1980. A naval base is currently under construction at Puerto Castilla.

Social Welfare

The state-run system of social security provides benefits for sickness, maternity, orphans, unemployment and accidents. It also provides family and old-age allowances. A Labour Code affords guarantees for employees. In 1979 Honduras had 1,141 physicians, 43 hospitals and 449 rural health centres. There was a total of 4,893 hospital beds available.

Education

Education is free and compulsory for children between seven and 12 years of age. In 1980, however, only 76% of children in this age-group attended primary school. Enrolment at secondary schools was equivalent to 30% of children aged 13 to 17. On completion of the first period of compulsory education, every adult must teach at least two illiterate adults to read and write. In 1983 there were 6,422 primary schools and 356 secondary and technical schools. There is an autonomous national university in Tegucigalpa, and private universities were opened in San Pedro and Tegucigalpa in 1978. In 1974 adult illiteracy averaged 43.1% (males 41.1%, females 44.9%).

Tourism

The ruins of Copán, second largest city of the old Mayan Empire, attract tourists and archaeologists. Lake Yojoa, near San Pedro Sula, and Trujillo Bay provide fishing and boating, and there is bathing on the Bay Islands and along the beaches of the northern coast. A number of new hotels, forming part of a tourist complex (costing 50m. lempiras) in the San Pedro Sula-Tela area, were completed in 1981. Honduras received 157,715 tourists in 1983.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 15 September (Independence Day), 3 October (Morazán Day), 12 October (Discovery Day), 21 October (Army Day), 25 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 27–30 March (Easter), 14 April (Pan-American Day/Bastilla's Day).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force, although some old Spanish measures are used, including: 25 libras = 1 arroba; 4 arrobas = 1 quintal (46 kg).

Currency and Exchange Rates

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = 2.318 lempiras;
US $1 = 2.000 lempiras.

The Constitution

Note: Following the elections of April 1980, the Constitution was revised. Amendments were approved by the National Assembly in November 1982.

A Constitution was passed by the Constituent National Assembly on 5 June 1965. The following are some of its main points:

Honduras is constituted as a democratic Republic. All Hondurans over the age of 18 are citizens.

THE SUFFRAGE AND POLITICAL PARTIES

The vote is direct and secret. Any political party which proclaims or practises doctrines contrary to the democratic spirit is forbidden. A National Electoral Council will be set up at the end of each Presidential term. Its general function will be to supervise all elections and to register political parties. A proportional system of voting will be adopted for the election of Municipal Corporations.

INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS AND GUARANTEES

The right to life is declared inviolable; the death penalty is abolished. The Constitution recognizes the right of habeas corpus and arrests may be made only by judicial order. Remand for interrogation may not last more than six days, and no-one may be held incommunicado for more than 24 hours. The Constitution recognizes the rights of free expression of thought and opinion, the free circulation of information, of peaceful, unarmed association, of free movement within and out of the country, of political asylum and of religious and educational freedom. Civil marriage and divorce are recognized.

WORKERS' WELFARE

All have a right to work. Day work shall not exceed eight hours per day or 44 hours per week; night work shall not exceed six hours per night or 36 hours per week. Equal pay shall be given for equal work. The legality of trades unions and the right to strike are recognized.

EDUCATION

The State is responsible for education, which shall be free, lay, and, in the primary stage, compulsory. Private education is liable to State inspection and regulation.

LEGISLATIVE POWER

Deputies are obliged to vote, for or against, on any measure at the discussion of which they are present. The National Assembly has power to grant amnesties to political prisoners; approve or disapprove of the actions of the Executive; declare part or the whole of the Republic subject to a state of siege; declare war; approve or withhold approval of treaties; withhold approval of the accounts of public expenditure when these exceed the sums fixed in the Budget; decree, interpret, repeal and amend laws, and pass legislation fixing the rate of exchange or stabilizing the national currency. The National Assembly may suspend certain guarantees in all or part of the Republic for 60 days in the case of grave danger from civil or foreign war, epidemics or any other calamity. Deputies are elected in the proportion of one deputy and one substitute for every 30,000 inhabitants, or fraction over 15,000. Congress may amend the basis in the light of increasing population.

EXECUTIVE POWER

The Executive Power is exercised by the President of the Republic, who is elected for six years, by a simple majority of the people.* No President may serve two terms in succession.

JUDICIAL POWER

The Judiciary consists of the Supreme Court, the Courts of Appeal and various lesser tribunals. The seven judges and five substitute judges of the Supreme Court are elected by the National Assembly for a period of six years. The Supreme Court can declare laws unconstitutional, and can censure the misconduct of ministers or officials when the National Assembly has declared there is a case to answer.

THE ARMED FORCES

The armed forces are declared by the Constitution to be essentially professional and non-political. The President exercises his power through a Commander-in-Chief who is designated for a period of six years by the National Assembly, which alone, by a two-thirds majority, may dismiss him†. Military service is obligatory.

LOCAL ADMINISTRATION

The country is divided into 18 departments for purposes of local administration, and these are subdivided into autonomous municipalities; the functions of local offices shall be only economic and administrative.

* Following the constitutional revision of 1981, the President is appointed for a four-year term by the political party gaining the most votes in the legislative elections.

† Under the constitutional amendments of 1982, the President ceased to be the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces.

INDIA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of India forms a natural sub-continent, with the Himalaya mountain range to the north. Two sections of the Indian Ocean, the Arabian Sea and the Bay of Bengal, lie to the west and east, respectively. India's neighbours are the People's Republic of China, Bhutan and Nepal to the north, Pakistan to the north-west and Burma to the north-east, while Bangladesh is surrounded by Indian territory except for a short frontier with Burma in the east. Near India's southern tip, across the Palk Strait, is Sri Lanka. India's climate ranges from temperate to tropical, with an average summer temperature on the plains of approximately 27°C (85°F). Annual rainfall varies widely, but the summer monsoon brings heavy rain over much of the country in June and July. The official language is Hindi, spoken by about 30% of the population. English is used as an associate language for many official purposes. The Indian Constitution also recognizes 16 regional languages, of which the most widely spoken are Telugu, Bengali, Marathi, Tamil, Urdu and Gujarati. Many other local languages are also used. According to the 1971 census, about 83% of the population are Hindus and 11% Muslims. There are also Christians, Sikhs, Buddhists, Jains and other minorities. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three equal horizontal stripes, of saffron, white and green, with the Dharma Chakra (Wheel of the Law), in blue, in the centre of the white stripe. The capital is New Delhi.

Recent History

After a prolonged struggle against British colonial rule, India became independent, within the Commonwealth, on 15 August 1947. The United Kingdom's Indian Empire was partitioned, broadly on a religious basis, between India and Pakistan (then in two sections, of which the eastern wing became Bangladesh in 1971). The principal nationalist movement opposing British rule was the Indian National Congress (later known as the Congress Party). At independence the Congress leader, Jawaharlal Nehru, became India's first Prime Minister. Sectarian violence, the movement of 12m. refugees, the integration of the former princely states into the Indian federal structure and a dispute with Pakistan over Kashmir presented major problems.

India became independent as a dominion, with the British monarch as Head of State, represented locally by an appointed Governor-General. In November 1949, however, the Constituent Assembly approved a republican constitution, providing for a President (with mainly ceremonial functions) to be Head of State. Accordingly, India became a republic on 26 January 1950, although remaining a member of the Commonwealth. France transferred sovereignty of Chandernagore to India in May 1950, and ceded its four remaining Indian settlements in November 1954.

Nehru established the dominance of the Congress Party. The lack of effective opposition aided the process of social reform and industrialization. In December 1961 Indian forces successfully invaded the Portuguese territories of Goa, Daman and Diu, which were immediately annexed by India. Border disputes with the People's Republic of China escalated into a brief military conflict in October 1962. Nehru died in May 1964 and was succeeded by Lal Bahadur Shastri, a former Minister of Home Affairs. India and Pakistan fought a second major war over Kashmir in August–September 1965. Following mediation by the USSR, Shastri and President Ayub Khan of Pakistan signed a joint declaration, aimed at a peaceful settlement of the Kashmir dispute, on 10 January 1966. Shastri died on the next day, however, and Nehru's daughter, Mrs Indira Gandhi, formerly Minister of Information and Broadcasting, became Prime Minister.

In the 1967 general elections the Congress Party's majority was reduced. After the presidential election of August 1969, when two wings of Congress supported different candidates, the success of Indira Gandhi's candidate split the party. The Organization (Opposition) Congress, led by Morarji Desai, a former Deputy Prime Minister, was formed in November 1969. However, at the next general election to the Lok Sabha, held in March 1971, Indira Gandhi's wing of Congress won 350 of the 515 elective seats where polling took place.

Border incidents led to a 12-day war with Pakistan in December 1971. The Indian army rapidly occupied East Pakistan, which India recognized as the independent state of Bangladesh. In 1972 India and Pakistan agreed on their cease-fire line in Kashmir. As a result of legislation approved in April–May 1975, the former protectorate of Sikkim became the 22nd State of the Indian Union, a constitutional change which soured India's relations with Nepal.

In 1975 Indira Gandhi was found guilty of electoral malpractice in the 1971 elections and was barred from holding elective office for six years. She then declared a state of emergency, and arrested more than 900 political opponents. In November the Supreme Court cleared her of electoral malpractice. A general election to the Lok Sabha was held in March 1977, when the number of elective seats was increased to 542. The election resulted in victory for the Janata (People's) Party, chaired by Morarji Desai, who became Prime Minister. Janata and an allied party, the Congress for Democracy, together received 43.2% of the total votes and won 298 of the 540 seats where polling took place. Congress received 34.5% of the votes and won 153 seats.

In January 1978 Indira Gandhi became leader of a new political group, the Congress (Indira) Party, known as Congress (I). A commission of inquiry, investigating the alleged excesses of her regime, found her guilty of corruption. In June Charan Singh, the Home Minister, and Raj Narain, the Health Minister, were dismissed for their criticism of Desai's Government. In November Indira Gandhi was elected to the Lok Sabha, but the House found her guilty of breach of privilege during the emergency rule, and she was expelled from the Lok Sabha.

In January 1979 Charan Singh returned to the Government as Minister of Finance and Desai's deputy. The Government's inability to handle the worsening domestic situation provoked a wave of defections by Lok Sabha members of the Janata party. Many joined Narain, who formed a new party, the Lok Dal, based on secularism. Congress (I) lost its position as official opposition party after defections from its ranks to the then official Congress party by members who objected to Indira Gandhi's authoritarianism. The resignation of Desai's Government was followed by the resignation from the party of Singh, who became the leader of the Lok Dal and, shortly afterwards, Prime Minister in a coalition with both Congress parties. When Congress (I) withdrew its support in August, Singh's 24-day Government fell and Parliament was dissolved. A general election to the Lok Sabha was held in January 1980, when polling took place in 525 of the 542 elective seats. Two more seats were decided in February. Altogether, Congress (I) received 42.7% of the total votes but won an overwhelming majority (352) of the seats. Janata, with 18.9% of the votes, won only 31 seats, while the Lok Dal (9.4%) won 41 seats. Indira Gandhi was reinstated as Prime Minister. Presidential rule was imposed in nine states, ruled by opposition parties, in February. At elections in June, Congress (I) gained majorities in eight of the nine states.

By-elections in June 1981 for the Lok Sabha and State assemblies were notable because of the landslide victory which Rajiv Gandhi, the Prime Minister's son and a former airline pilot, obtained in the former constituency of his late brother, Sanjay (who had been killed in an air crash in June 1980) and because of the failure of the fragmented Janata party to win any seats. In January 1982 Indira Gandhi reshuffled the Council of Ministers, appointing a new Minister of Defence, a portfolio that she had previously held. In September there was a major reshuffle when Indira Gandhi appointed eight new Ministers, including five followers of the late Sanjay Gandhi. In February 1983 Rajiv Gandhi became a general secretary of Congress (I).

Indira Gandhi's Government faced serious problems, as disturbances in several states, particularly in Assam, continued in 1982 and 1983 with violent protests against the presence of Bengali immigrants. Presidential rule in Assam was replaced by a Congress (I) Government in February 1982, in an effort to quell dissent. To avoid a constitutional crisis, further elections were held in Assam (and Meghalaya) in February 1983, amid scenes of great intercommunal violence, leading to several thousand deaths. In an effort to curtail the flow of Bengali immigrants, it was decided in July that the Assam/Bangladesh border should be fenced. There was also unrest in Jammu and Kashmir during local elections there in June 1983, and in July 1984 when the Chief Minister was deposed. Alleged police corruption and the resurgence of caste violence (notably in Bihar and Gujarat) caused further problems for the Government. The election defeats in Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka and Tripura in January 1983 represented a setback for Indira Gandhi, who then reshuffled her Council of Ministers.

Another major problem was the widespread unrest in the Sikh community of Punjab, despite the election to the Indian presidency in July 1982 of Giani Zail Singh, the first Sikh to hold the position. There were demands for greater religious recognition, for the settlement of grievances over land and water rights, and about the sharing of the state capital at Chandigarh with Haryana, and also demands from a small minority for a separate Sikh state ('Kalistan'). In October 1983 the Punjabi Government was dismissed and the state was brought under presidential control, to prevent an escalation of violence between the Sikh and Hindu populations. However, the violence continued, and followers of the extremist Sikh leader, Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale, turned the Golden Temple (the Sikh holy shrine) at Amritsar into a terrorist stronghold. In June 1984 the Government sent in the army to dislodge the extremists. The assault on the Golden Temple resulted in the death of Bhindranwale and hundreds of his supporters, and serious damage to sacred buildings. A curfew was imposed in Punjab, and the army blockaded Amritsar. There were mutinies among Sikh troops in various parts of India. The situation remained tense throughout the summer. In October 1984 Indira Gandhi was assassinated by militant Sikh members of her personal guard. Her son, Rajiv Gandhi, was immediately sworn in as Prime Minister, despite his lack of previous ministerial experience. There was widespread communal violence throughout India, with more than 2,000 deaths, which was curbed by the prompt action of the Government.

A general election to the Lok Sabha, which was due in January 1985 under the constitution, was held in December 1984 throughout the country, apart from those regions which were deemed by the Government to be too disturbed (such as Assam and Punjab). Congress (I), aided by the youthfulness of the electorate (68% of whom were between 21 and 40 years of age), the total disunity of the opposition and a large sympathy vote for Rajiv Gandhi, achieved a decisive victory, gaining the largest parliamentary majority in India's history. The party received about 49% of the total votes and won 400 of the 508 contested seats. Rajiv Gandhi announced his Council of Ministers in January 1985, and pledged to continue most of his mother's policies. However, he was expected to remove protectionist trade controls, in an effort to boost exports, and to look more favourably towards the USA, while retaining India's long-standing commitment to the Non-Aligned Movement.

The Janata Government of 1977–80 had embarked on a policy of improving relations with all neighbouring countries, which the Congress (I) Government continued. In 1982 India made an interim agreement with Bangladesh over the sharing of the Ganges waters, but disputes continued. The disputed ownership of a new island in the Bay of Bengal remains unresolved. Relations with Pakistan deteriorated, owing to Pakistan's potential capability for the development of nuclear weapons and major US deliveries of armaments to that country. The Indian Government believed that such deliveries would upset the balance of power in the region and would precipitate an arms race. Talks between Pakistan's President, Gen. Zia ul-Haq, and Indira Gandhi in November 1982 eased the tension. On the death of Indira Gandhi, Pakistan immediately assured India of its continued peaceful intentions, and President Zia ul-Haq, along with many other world leaders, attended her funeral.

During 1981 there was a marked improvement in India's relations with the People's Republic of China, which had suffered a setback after India's recognition of the Heng Samrin Government of Kampuchea in July 1980. Both countries agreed to find an early solution to their border dispute and to seek to normalize relations. In November 1983 Indira Gandhi hosted the Commonwealth Conference in New Delhi.

The USSR is a major contributor of economic and military assistance to India. In 1973 a 15-year agreement was concluded between the two countries, and in 1981 India became the USSR's leading trade partner in the developing world. Indira Gandhi visited Moscow for talks in September 1982. There are close ties between the USA and India in economic and scientific affairs, and political ties were strengthened after Indira Gandhi's visit to the USA in July 1982, when a compromise was agreed on the question of nuclear fuel for India's Tarapur atomic reactor. India remains uneasy over the continued support, in aid and armaments, which is given to Pakistan by the USA.

Government

India is a federal republic. Legislative power is vested in Parliament, consisting of the President and two Houses. The Council of States (Rajya Sabha) has 244 members, including 236 indirectly elected by the State Assemblies for six years (one-third retiring every two years) and eight nominated by the President for six years. The House of the People (Lok Sabha) has 544 members, serving for five years (subject to dissolution). Two members of the Lok Sabha are nominated by the President to represent the Anglo-Indian community, while the remaining 542 are directly elected by universal adult suffrage in single-member constituencies. The President is a constitutional Head of State, elected for five years by an electoral college comprising elected members of both Houses of Parliament and the State legislatures. The President exercises executive power on the advice of the Council of Ministers, which is responsible to Parliament. The President appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers.

India contains 22 self-governing States, each with a Governor (appointed by the President for five years), a legislature (elected for five years) and a Council of Ministers headed by the Chief Minister. Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Jammu and Kashmir, Maharashtra, Karnataka, Tamil Nadu and Uttar Pradesh have bicameral legislatures, the other 15 State legislatures being unicameral. Each State has its own legislative, executive and judicial machinery, corresponding to that of the Indian Union. In the event of the failure of constitutional government in a State, Presidential rule can be imposed by the Union. There are also nine Union Territories, administered by Chief Commissioners, Lieutenant-Governors or Administrators, all of whom are appointed by the President.

Defence

In July 1984 India had armed forces of 1,120,000: an army of 960,000, a navy of 47,000 and an air force of 113,000. Military service has been voluntary but, under the amended Constitution, it is the fundamental duty of every citizen to do national service when called upon. Net defence expenditure for 1984/85 was estimated at 60,756m. rupees.

Economic Affairs

On the basis of aggregate gross national product (GNP), India ranks among the 15 largest economies in the world. However, with its vast population (second only to the People's Republic of China), the country remains among the 20 poorest in terms of average income. In 1982, according to estimates by the World Bank, India's GNP per head was US $260 (at average 1980–82 prices), having increased by 1.3% annually, in real terms, since 1960. The average annual growth of overall gross domestic product (GDP), measured in constant prices, was 3.4% in 1960–70, rising to 3.6% in 1970–82.

About 65% of the working population are engaged in agriculture, which accounts for more than one-third of GDP. The major part of the sown area is taken up by cereals, the staple crops. Extensive plantations produce tea, rubber and coffee, while cotton, jute, sugar, oilseeds, tobacco and other cash crops are also grown. Crops are frequently damaged by drought and floods. Since 1975/76 improved irrigation, the increased use of chemical fertilizers and the introduction of high-yield strains of rice and wheat, as well as favourable monsoons, have led to record harvests. The area under irrigation was expected to increase from 63.3m. ha in 1983/84 to 68m. ha in 1984/85. India's production of food grains (cereals and pulses), after two poor harvests in 1980 and 1981, reached a record 133.3m. metric tons (including rice on a milled basis) in 1981/82, which was surpassed by a harvest of 151.6m. tons in 1983/84 and by an expected 153m. tons in 1984/85. The annual output of food grains increased by 14% in the period 1979–84, representing an average annual increase of 2.6%; a rate which exceeded the 2% annual population growth.

India has the fourth largest coal reserves in the world, and large reserves of iron ore in Bihar and Orissa, as well as bauxite, titanium ore, manganese, rare metals and mica. In 1981 the Government negotiated a large foreign loan to build new aluminium and steel plants in Orissa. In 1983 India became the world's leading exporter of cut diamonds, and placed 5.6m. carats on the international market. Inshore deposits of petroleum have been found in Assam, Gujarat and Nagaland, and offshore oilfields have been discovered in the Western continental shelf off the Maharashtra coast, in the Cauvery basin and in the Bay of Bengal. In 1980 it was announced that foreign oil companies would be allowed to explore for petroleum, both onshore and offshore. Production at the Bassei offshore gas field (one of the largest in the world) was expected to begin in 1985. In 1985 the Government planned to construct a gas pipeline of 1,800 km, from near Bombay to Bareilly, to tap the reserves of the Bombay offshore fields.

Petroleum from India's own resources is playing a growing role in the economy. India produced about 73% of its petroleum requirements in 1984, compared with 50% in 1983 and 34% in 1980. Output of crude petroleum was 26m. tons in 1983/84, and was expected to reach 30m. tons in 1984/85. As a result of increased production, imports (in value terms) of iron and steel, crude petroleum and petroleum products declined by around 25% in the fiscal year 1984. However, it will still be necessary to import 14.7m. tons (at an estimated cost of Rs 29,000m.) to ensure sufficient supplies. The Government aims to spend US $28,000m. on the petroleum industry during the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1985–90), drilling more than 2,500 new oil wells and increasing annual refining capacity to 45m. tons, in an attempt to become self-sufficient in petroleum by 1990.

India ranks among the 10 leading industrial nations in the world, although manufacturing employs only about 10% of the country's workers. New industries, such as heavy engineering, iron and steel, chemicals and electronics, have expanded rapidly, and by 1978 machinery and transport equipment had superseded tea or jute as India's largest single earner of foreign currency. In 1982/83 the value of tea exports was Rs 3,675.3m. and jute exports totalled Rs 2,027.6m., while sales of machinery and transport equipment earned Rs 5,846m. Annual growth in industrial production reached a peak of 10.6% in 1976/77. The increase in 1978/79 was only 2% below this, but in 1979/80 India's industrial output fell by 1.4%, mainly as a result of drought and a shortage of power and coal. The position improved slightly in 1980/81, when overall industrial growth was estimated at 4.1%. Various measures have been introduced to try to improve both power generation and industrial relations, the two main hindrances to increased production. India had a more successful year in 1981/82, with the growth of industrial production doubling to a reasonable 8%, but industrial growth in 1982/83 slumped to 3.7%, mainly because of the severe drought. Industrial production increased by 8% in 1983/84, and was expected to rise by around 7% in 1984/85.

Aided by a favourable monsoon, the Indian economy recovered in the fiscal year 1984, after a disappointing performance in the previous two years, and GNP rose by 7%, compared with growth of 2.6% in 1983 and 5.9% in 1982, while inflation fell to around 6.3% from 10% in 1982/83 and 8% in 1981/82. The trade deficit, which had widened alarmingly in 1980/81 to Rs 58,020m. (owing to the rising cost of imports), increased to Rs 62,583m. in 1982/83 and fell marginally to an estimated Rs 58,840m. in 1983/84, despite a drop in the oil-import bill, and mainly because of a prolonged strike in India's ports. Imports increased to Rs 153,470m. in 1983/84, compared with 143,558m. in 1982/83, while exports reached Rs 98,650m., compared with 88,340m. in 1982/83. Official reserves of foreign exchange fell from US $6,731m. at the end of 1979 to $3,442m. in September 1982, but they recovered to $5,114m. in June 1984. In 1981 the IMF sanctioned a loan of US $5,760m., the largest single borrowing by India, as part of an attempt to overcome balance-of-payments difficulties and to restructure the economy. In June 1982 India received $3,700m. in aid for 1983 from Western donor countries. The overall strengthening of India's economy was indicated by the waiving of $360m. of the IMF loan in June 1983. It was estimated that the current deficit on the balance of payments would be $5,100m. in 1983/84, compared with $5,700m. in 1982/83 and $1,300m. in 1978/79.

In 1984 the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1985–90) was announced. It allows for a total investment of Rs 3,200,000m. (double that of the sixth Plan) and aims at an average annual GDP growth rate of around 5.%. Growth rates of 4% for agriculture and 7% for industry are envisaged. The main emphasis is on improving agriculture, developing infrastructure, making more efficient use of existing capital investment and also increasing employment. The sixth Five-Year Plan achieved its target of an annual growth rate of 5.2%.

Transport and Communications

India had 61,385 route km of railways in March 1983. About 16,180 km of rivers are navigable by power-driven craft, and 3,631 km by large country boats. By March 1983 there were 1,675,000 km of roads, including 31,398 km of national highways and 95,491 km of state highways, connecting the main towns. The Indian Airlines Corporation provides internal air transport and also serves India's immediate neighbours. Air India provides international services. Its subsidiary, Vayudoot Private Ltd, provides air links to smaller towns in north-eastern India. In September 1983 an Indian commercial earth satellite was launched by the US space shuttle 'Challenger'. It was hoped that the satellite would improve telecommunications, so that the area of India with possible access to television would be extended to cover 75% of the population by 1985.

Social Welfare

Health programmes are primarily the responsibility of the State Governments, but the Union Government provides finance for improvements in public health services. The structure of the health system is based on a network of primary health centres. In 1977 there were 5,372 such centres and 37,745 sub-centres in rural areas. In 1978 India had 508,907 hospital beds and 178,000 physicians. Various national health programmes aim to combat leprosy, malaria and tuberculosis. Smallpox was declared eradicated in 1977. The family planning programme was launched in 1952 and has been allocated Rs 10,000m. under the sixth Five-Year Plan. The emphasis now is on advice and education through Family Welfare Centres.

Education

Education is primarily the responsibility of the individual State Governments. Elementary education for children up to 14 years of age is theoretically compulsory in all States except Nagaland and Himachal Pradesh. Lower primary education, for children aged six to 11, is free in all States. Upper primary education, for children aged 11–14, is free in 12 States. Enrolment at the first level of education in 1980 was equivalent to 79% of children aged five to nine (93% of boys; 64% of girls). Secondary enrolment in 1980 was 30% of those aged 10 to 15 (39% of boys; 20% of girls). A new pattern of education, consisting of 10 years' elementary education, two years at higher secondary level and three years for the first degree course, was planned to be introduced in all States by 1980. The sixth Five-Year Plan aimed for universal free and compulsory education up to the age of 14 by 1983. In 1978 the National Board for Adult Education launched a massive programme to combat illiteracy. Of the total population, 36.17% were literate in 1981, compared with 15.67% in 1961. However, female literacy was only 24.88% in 1981, and women's education, especially in rural areas, has made few advances.

Tourism

The tourist attractions of India include its scenery, its historic forts, palaces and temples, and its rich variety of wild life. Tourist infrastructure has recently been expanded by the provision of more luxury hotels and improved means of transport. In 1983 there were 884,731 foreign visitors to India.

Public Holidays

The public holidays observed in India vary locally. The dates given below apply to Delhi. As religious feasts depend on astronomical observations, holidays are usually declared at the beginning of the year in which they will be observed. It is not possible, therefore, to indicate more than the month in which some of the following holidays will occur.

1985: May (Buddha Purnima), 20 June (Rath Yatra and Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 15 August (Independence Day), 20 August (Janmashtami), 27 August (Id-uz-Zuha), 28 August (Onam), 16 September (Muharram), 2 October (Mahatma Gandhi's Birthday), October (Diwali), 18–20 October (Durga Puja-Dussehra), 1 November (Guru Nanak Jayanti), 25–26 December (Christmas).

1986: January (Pongal), 26 January (Republic Day), February (Maha Shivratri), March (Holi), 28 March (Good Friday), April (Ram Navami and Mahabir Jayanti).

Weights and Measures

The metric system has been officially introduced. The imperial system is also still in use, as are traditional Indian weights and measures, including:

1 tola = 11.66 grams
1 seer = 933.1 grams
1 maund = 37.32 kg
1 lakh = (1,00,00) = 100,000
1 crore = (1,00,00,000) = 10,000,000

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 paisa = 1 Indian rupee (R).

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = 14.400 rupees;
US $1 = 12.425 rupees.

The Constitution

The Constitution of India, adopted by the Constituent Assembly on 26 November 1949, was inaugurated on 26 January 1950. The Preamble declares that the People of India solemnly resolve to constitute a Sovereign Democratic Republic and to secure to all its citizens justice, liberty, equality and fraternity. There are 397 articles and nine schedules, which form a comprehensive document.

UNION OF STATES

The Union of India comprises 22 states and nine Union Territories. There are provisions for the formation and admission of new states.

The Constitution confers citizenship on a threefold basis of birth, descent, and residence. Provisions are made for refugees who have migrated from Pakistan and for persons of Indian origin residing abroad.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND DIRECTIVE PRINCIPLES

The rights of the citizen contained in Part III of the Constitution are declared fundamental and enforceable in law. 'Untouchability' is abolished and its practice in any form is a punishable offence. The Directive Principles of State Policy provide a code intended to ensure promotion of the economic, social and educational welfare of the State in future legislation.

THE PRESIDENT

The President is the head of the Union, exercising all executive powers on the advice of the Council of Ministers responsible to Parliament. He is elected by an electoral college consisting of elected members of both Houses of Parliament and the Legislatures of the States. The President holds office for a term of five years and is eligible for re-election. He may be impeached for violation of the Constitution. The Vice-President is the ex officio Chairman of the Rajya Sabha and is elected by a joint sitting of both Houses of Parliament.

THE PARLIAMENT

The Parliament of the Union consists of the President and two Houses: the Rajya Sabha (Council of States) and the Lok Sabha (House of the People). The Rajya Sabha consists of 244 members, of whom eight are nominated by the President. One-third of its members retire every two years. Elections are indirect, each state's legislative quota being elected by the members of the state's legislative assembly. The Lok Sahba has 542 members elected by adult franchise; not more than 17 represent the Union Territories. It may also include a number of members nominated by the President.

GOVERNMENT OF THE STATES

The governmental machinery of states closely resembles that of the Union. Each of these states has a governor at its head appointed by the President for a term of five years to exercise executive power on the advice of a council of ministers. The state's legislatures consist of the Governor and either one house (legislative assembly) or two houses (legislative assembly and legislative council). The term of the assembly is five years, but the council is not subject to dissolution.

LANGUAGE

The Constitution provides that the official language of the Union shall be Hindi. (The English language will continue to be an associate language for many official purposes.)

LEGISLATION—FEDERAL SYSTEM

The Constitution provides that bills, other than money bills, can be introduced in either House. To become law, they must be passed by both Houses and receive the assent of the President. In financial affairs, the authority of the Lower House is final. The various subjects of legislation are enumerated on three lists in the seventh schedule of the Constitution: the Union List, containing nearly 100 entries, including external affairs, defence, communications and atomic energy; the State List, containing 65 entries, including local government, police, public health, education; and the Concurrent List, with over 40 entries, including criminal law, marriage and divorce, labour welfare. The Constitution vests residuary authority in the Centre. All matters not enumerated in the Concurrent or State Lists will be deemed to be included in the Union List, and in the event of conflict between Union and State Law on any subject enumerated in the Concurrent List the Union Law will prevail. In time of emergency Parliament may even exercise powers otherwise exclusively vested in the states. Under Article 356, 'If the President on receipt of a report from the government of a state or otherwise is satisfied that a situation has arisen in which the Government of the state cannot be carried on in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, the President may by Proclamation: (a) assume to himself all or any of the functions of the government of the state and all or any of the powers of the governor or any body or authority in the state other than the Legislature of the state; (b) declare that the powers of the Legislature of the state shall be exercisable by or under the authority of Parliament; (c) make such incidental provisions as appear to the President to be necessary': provided that none of the powers of a High Court be assumed by the President or suspended in any way. Unless such a Proclamation is approved by both Houses of Parliament, it ceases to operate after two months. A Proclamation so approved ceases to operate after six months, unless renewed by Parliament. Its renewal cannot be extended beyond a total period of three years. An independent judiciary exists to define and interpret the Constitution and to resolve constitutional disputes arising between states, or between a state and the Government of India.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Other Provisions of the Constitution deal with the administration of tribal areas, relations between the Union and states, inter-state trade and finance.

AMENDMENTS

The Constitution is flexible in character, and a simple process of amendment has been adopted. For amendment of provisions concerning the Supreme Courts and the High Courts, the distribution of legislative powers between the Union and the states, the representation of the states in Parliament, etc., the amendment must be passed by both Houses of Parliament and must further be ratified by the legislatures of not less than half the states. In other cases no reference to the state legislatures is necessary.

Numerous amendments were adopted in August 1975, following the declaration of a state of emergency in June. The Constitution (39th Amendment) Bill laid down that the President's reasons for proclaiming an emergency may not be challenged in any court. Under the Constitution (40th Amendment) Bill, 38 existing laws may not be challenged before any court on the ground of violation of fundamental rights. Thus detainees under the Maintenance of Internal Security Act could not be told the grounds of their detention and were forbidden bail and any claim to liberty through natural or common law. The Constitution (41st Amendment) Bill provided that the President, Prime Minister and state Governors should be immune from criminal prosecution for life and from civil prosecution during their term of office.

In November 1976 a 59-clause Constitution (42nd Amendment) Bill was approved by Parliament and came into force in January 1977. Some of the provisions of the Bill are that the Indian Democratic Republic shall be named a 'Democratic Secular and Socialist Republic'; that the President 'shall act in accordance with' the advice given to him by the Prime Minister and Cabinet, and, acting at the Prime Minister's direction, shall be empowered for two years to amend the Constitution by executive order, in any way beneficial to the enforcement of the whole; that the term of the Lok Sabha and of the State Assemblies shall be extended from five to six years; that there shall be no limitation on the constituent power of Parliament to amend the Constitution, and that India's Supreme Court shall be barred from hearing petitions challenging Constitutional amendments; that strikes shall be forbidden in the public services and the Union Government have the power to deploy police or other forces under its own superintendence and control in any state. Directive Principles are given precedence over Fundamental Rights: 10 basic duties of citizens are listed, including the duty to 'defend the country and render national service when called upon to do so'.

The Janata Party government, which came into power in March 1977, promised to amend the Constitution during the year, so as to 'restore the balance between the people and Parliament, Parliament and the judiciary, the judiciary and the executive, the states and the centre, and the citizen and the Government that the founding fathers of the Constitution had worked out'. The Constitution (43rd Amendment) Bill, passed by Parliament in December 1977, the Constitution (44th Amendment) Bill, passed by Parliament in December 1977 and later redesignated the 43rd Amendment, and the Constitution (45th Amendment) Bill, passed by Parliament in December 1978 and later redesignated the 44th Amendment, reversed most of the changes enacted by the Constitution (42nd Amendment) Bill. The 44th Amendment is particularly detailed on emergency provisions: An emergency may not be proclaimed unless 'the security of India or any part of its territory was threatened by war or external aggression or by armed rebellion.' Its introduction must be approved by a two-thirds majority of Parliament within a month, and after six months the emergency may be continued only with the approval of Parliament. Among the provisions left unchanged after these Bills were a section subordinating Fundamental Rights to Directive Principles and a clause empowering the central government to deploy armed forces under its control in any state without the state government's consent. In May 1980 the Indian Supreme Court repealed sections 4 and 55 of the 42nd Amendment Act, thus curtailing Parliament's power to enforce directive principles and to amend the Constitution. The death penalty was declared constitutionally valid.

THE PANCHAYAT RAJ SCHEME

This scheme is designed to decentralize the powers of the Union and state governments. It is based on the Panchayat (Village Council) and the Gram Sabha (Village Parliament) and envisages the gradual transference of local government from state to local authority. Revenue and internal security will remain state responsibilities at present. By 1978 the scheme had been introduced in all the states except Meghalaya, Nagaland and 23 out of 31 districts in Bihar. The Panchayat existed in all the Union Territories except Lakshadweep, Mizoram and Pondicherry.

Political Organizations

In 1907 Congress, which had been established in 1885, was split in two—the Extremists and the Moderates. In 1969 Congress again split into two distinct organizations, with Indira Gandhi's Government continuing in office while the Indian National Congress (Organization) became India's first recognized opposition party. Further splits occurred in January 1978, when Indira Gandhi formed a breakaway group, the Indian National Congress (I), and again in 1981 when the Indian National Congress (Socialist) was formed. In July 1981 a Supreme Court ruling confirmed Congress (I) as the official Congress party.

Judicial System

THE SUPREME COURT

The Supreme Court, consisting of a Chief Justice and not more than 17 judges appointed by the President, exercises exclusive jurisdiction in any dispute between the Union and the states (although there are certain restrictions where an acceding state is involved). It has appellate jurisdiction over any judgment, decree or order of the High Court where that Court certifies that either a substantial question of law or the interpretation of the Constitution is involved.

Provision is made for the appointment by the Chief Justice of India of judges of High Courts as ad hoc judges at sittings of the Supreme Court for specified periods, and for the attendance of retired judges at sittings of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has advisory jurisdiction in respect of questions which may be referred to it by the President for opinion. The Supreme Court is also empowered to hear appeals against a sentence of death passed by a State High Court in reversal of an order of acquittal by a lower court, and in a case in which a High Court has granted a certificate of fitness.

The Supreme Court also hears appeals which are certified by High Courts to be fit for appeal, subject to rules made by the Court. Parliament may, by law, confer on the Supreme Court any further powers of appeal.

Chief Justice of India: YESHWANT VISHNU CHANDRACHUD.

HIGH COURTS

The High Courts are the Courts of Appeal from the lower courts, and their decisions are final except in cases where appeal lies to the Supreme Court.

LOWER COURTS

Provision is made in the Code of Criminal Procedure for the constitution of lower criminal courts called Courts of Session and Courts of Magistrates. The Courts of Session are competent to try all persons duly committed for trial, and inflict any punishment authorized by the law. The President and the local government concerned exercise the prerogative of mercy.

The constitution of inferior civil courts is determined by regulations within each state.

The Press

Freedom of the Press was guaranteed under articles 13 and 19 of the Constitution. A measure giving the Press the right to publish proceedings of Parliament without being subjected to censorship or the fear of civil or criminal action was popularly known as the 'Feroz Gandhi Act'. This privilege was withdrawn when the Government declared a state of emergency in June 1975 and article 19 of the Constitution, which guaranteed the right to freedom of speech and expression, was suspended. In order to facilitate censorship of all news, a merger of the existing news agencies was enforced in January 1975, and Samachar, the state news agency, was established. However, pre-censorship was declared illegal by the courts in September 1975, and censorship of foreign correspondents ended in September 1976, but the Prevention of Publication of Objectionable Matter Act, passed by Parliament in early 1976, still greatly restricted press freedom. In April 1977 the new Government introduced bills to repeal the Prevention of Publication of Objectionable Matter Act and to restore the rights of the 'Feroz Gandhi Act', which were both subsequently approved by Parliament. The right to report Parliamentary proceedings was further guaranteed under the Constitution (45th amendment) Bill of December 1978, later redesignated the 44th amendment. In April 1978 Samachar was disbanded and the original agencies were re-established.

In March 1979 a Press Council was set up (its predecessor was abolished in 1975). Its function is to uphold the freedom of the Press and maintain and improve journalistic standards. In 1980 a second Press Commission was appointed to inquire into the growth and status of the press since the first commission gave its report, and suggest how best it should develop in the future.

The growth of a thriving press has been made difficult by cultural barriers caused by religious, caste and language differences. Consequently the English-language press, with its appeal to the educated middle-class urban readership throughout the states, has retained its dominance. The English metropolitan dailies, such as the Times of India (published in three cities), Indian Express (published in 10 cities), the Hindu (published in five cities) and the Statesman (published in two cities), are some of the widest circulating and most influential newspapers. In 1981 there were 19,144 newspapers and magazines: 1,264 were dailies, 5,624 weeklies and 12,256 other periodicals. More were published in Hindi than in English, and the combined circulation for Hindi papers was 13,984,000 copies per issue, while the English language press had a total circulation of 11,039,000. The readership of daily newspapers is just over 21 per thousand, and in 1981 they were published in 84 languages. There were 597 government publications in 1981.

The main Indian language dailies, such as the Navbharat Times (Hindi), Malayala Manorama (Malayalam), the Jugantar (Bengali) and Ananda Bazar Patrika (Bengali), by paying attention to rural affairs, cater for the increasingly literate non-anglophone provincial population. Most Indian-language papers have a relatively small circulation.

The more popular weekly and fortnightly periodicals include the cultural Tamil publications Kumudam, Kalki, Rani and Ananda Vikatan, the English Illustrated Weekly of India, India Today, Sunday and the sensationalist Blitz, published in English, Hindi and Urdu. The main monthly periodicals are the Reader's Digest and the Hindi Manohar Kahaniyan.

The majority of publications in India are under individual ownership (65% in 1981), while newspapers owned by joint stock companies claim the largest part of the total circulation (38.4% in 1981). The most powerful groups own most of the large English dailies and frequently have considerable private commercial and industrial holdings. Four of the major groups are as follows:

Times of India Group (controlled by ASHOK JAIN and family): dailies: the Times of India, Economic Times, the Evening News of India (Bombay), the Hindi Navbharat Times, the Maharashtra Times (Bombay); periodicals: the Illustrated Weekly of India, the Hindi weeklies Dharmayug and Dinaman, the English fortnightlies Femina and Filmfare and Hindi publs including Parag and Sarita.

Indian Express Group (controlled by the RAMNATH GOENKA family): dailies: the Indian Express, the Marathi Loksatta, the Tamil Dinamani, the Telugu Andhra Prabha, the Kannada Kannada Prabha and the English Financial Express; periodicals: the English weeklies the Indian Express (Sunday edition), Screen, Cinema Express (fortnightly) and the Telugu Andhra Prabha Illustrated Weekly.

Hindustan Times Group (controlled by the BIRLA family): dailies: the Hindustan Times (Delhi), the Searchlight (Patna), Pradeep (Patna), the Hindi Hindustan (Delhi) and Bharat (Allahabad); periodicals: the weeklies the Overseas Hindustan Times, Week End, the Hindi Saptahik Hindustan (Delhi) and the Hindi monthly Nandan (New Delhi).

Ananda Bazar Patrika Group (controlled by ASOKE SARKAR and family): dailies: the Ananda Bazar Patrika (Calcutta), the English Business Standard, The Telegraph; periodicals include the English weeklies Sunday and Sports World, the English fortnightly Business World, Bengali weekly Desh, Hindi weekly Ravivar, Bengali monthly Anandamela and the Bengali fortnightly Anandlok.

Radio and Television

Radio broadcasting in India began in 1927 and came under government control in 1930. Commercial television began in 1976, and by 1981 it covered 18% of the population, spread over 6.5% of the country. In 1978 it was decided that All India Radio and Doordarshan India should become autonomous corporations. To maximize broadcasting coverage, the Government installs and maintains radio and television sets in community centres. Both radio and television carry commercial advertising.

In 1983 there were an estimated 22m. radio sets and an estimated 3m. television sets in use.

INDONESIA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Indonesia consists of a group of about 13,700 islands, lying between the mainland of South-East Asia and Australia. The archipelago stretches from the Malay peninsula to New Guinea. The principal islands are Java, Sumatra, Kalimantan (Borneo), Sulawesi (Celebes), Irian Jaya (West New Guinea), the Moluccas and Timor. Indonesia's only land frontiers are with Papua New Guinea, to the east of Irian Jaya, and with the Malaysian states of Sarawak and Sabah, which occupy northern Borneo. The climate is tropical, with an average annual temperature of 26°C (79°F) and heavy rainfall during most seasons. The official language is Bahasa Indonesia (a form of Malay) but some 25 local languages (mainly Javanese) and more than 250 dialects are also spoken. An estimated 78% of the inhabitants profess adherence to Islam, and Indonesia has more Muslims than any other country. About 11% of the population are Christians, while most of the remainder are either Hindus or Buddhists. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has two equal horizontal stripes, of red and white. The capital is Jakarta, on the island of Java.

Recent History

Indonesia was formerly the Netherlands East Indies, except for the former Portuguese colony of East Timor (see below).

Dutch occupation began in the 17th century and was gradually extended to the whole archipelago. Nationalist opposition to colonial rule began in the early 20th century. During the Second World War the territory was occupied by Japanese forces from March 1942. On 17 August 1945, three days after the Japanese surrender, a group of nationalists proclaimed the independence of Indonesia. The first President of the self-proclaimed republic was Dr Sukarno, a leader of the nationalist movement since the 1920s. The declaration of independence was not recognized by the Netherlands, which attempted to restore its pre-war control of the islands. After four years of intermittent warfare and negotiations between the Dutch authorities and the nationalists, agreement was reached on a formal transfer of power. On 27 December 1949 the United States of Indonesia became legally independent, with Dr Sukarno continuing as President. The first Vice-President was Dr Mohammed Hatta, Sukarno's closest collaborator in the nationalist movement. Initially, the country had a federal constitution which gave limited self-government to the 16 constituent regions. In August 1950, however, the federation was dissolved and the country became the unitary Republic of Indonesia. The abandonment of regional autonomy met some resistance, particularly among the Christian population of the South Moluccas. The 1949 independence agreement excluded West New Guinea (now Irian Jaya), which remained under Dutch control until October 1962 but, following a brief period of UN administration, was transferred to Indonesia in May 1963.

President Sukarno followed a policy of extreme nationalism, and his regime became increasingly dictatorial. His foreign policy was sympathetic to the People's Republic of China but he also played a leading role in the Non-Aligned Movement. Vice-President Hatta, alienated by Sukarno's one-man rule, resigned in 1956. President Sukarno bitterly opposed the establishment of the Federation of Malaysia (q.v.) in 1963. Inflation, widespread corruption and Sukarno's Marxist tendencies provoked opposition to his regime from students, the armed forces and Islamic groups. In September–October 1965 there was an attempted military coup, in which the Indonesian Communist Party (PKI) was strongly implicated. The attempt failed, and a mass slaughter of alleged PKI members and supporters ensued. In March 1966, as a consequence of the abortive coup, President Sukarno was forced to transfer emergency executive powers to military commanders, led by Gen. Suharto, Chief of Staff of the Army, who outlawed the PKI. The policy of 'confrontation' with Malaysia ended in August 1966, and Indonesia rejoined the UN (which it had left in 1965 as a protest against Malaysia's membership of the Security Council). In February 1967 President Sukarno transferred full power to Gen. Suharto. In March the People's Consultative Assembly removed Sukarno from office and named Gen. Suharto acting President. He became Prime Minister in October 1967 and, after being elected by the Assembly, he was inaugurated as President in March 1968. Meanwhile, Indonesia's relations with China deteriorated drastically, and they were formally suspended in October 1967. In July 1971, in the first general election since 1955, the government-sponsored Sekber Golongan Karya (Joint Secretariat of Functional Groups), known as Golkar, won a majority of seats in the House of Representatives. President Suharto was re-elected in March 1973.

Under Suharto's 'New Order', real power passed from the legislature and Cabinet to a small group of army officers and to Kopkamtib, the chief security organization. Left-wing movements were suppressed, and a liberal economic policy adopted. A general election in May 1977 gave Golkar a majority in the legislature, and Suharto was re-elected President (unopposed) in March 1978. Between 1977 and 1979 the Government released political prisoners who had been detained since the 1965 coup attempt. Several petitions criticizing the Government were channelled constitutionally through the Indonesian Assembly in 1981. Throughout 1981 there were a number of anti-Chinese disturbances. Golkar won an increased majority in the elections in May 1982, but the campaign was marred by considerable violence. New legislation, approved in July, confirmed the 'dual (i.e. military and socio-economic) function' of the armed forces. In March 1983 Suharto was re-elected, again unopposed, as President.

In September 1984 serious rioting, apparently started by Muslim activists, took place in the port area of Tanjung Priok, near Jakarta, when an estimated 18 people died and more than 50 were injured following clashes between Muslim rioters and troops. The disturbances, and a spate of bombings in the commercial centre of Jakarta in October, were thought to have stemmed, in part, from Muslim opposition to a draft bill requiring all political, social and religious organizations to adopt Pancasila, the state philosophy, as their only ideology.

In 1975 Portugal withdrew from its colony of East Timor. The territory's capital, Dili, was occupied by the forces of the left-wing Frente Revolucionário de Este Timor Independente (Fretilin), which advocated independence for East Timor. To prevent Fretilin from gaining full control, Indonesian troops intervened and set up a provisional government. In July 1976 East Timor was fully integrated as the 27th province of Indonesia. However, resistance to Indonesian rule continues, and the UN does not yet recognize Indonesia's absorption of the territory. In February 1983 the UN Commission on Human Rights passed a resolution affirming East Timor's right to independence and self-determination. In 1979 there were reports of widespread starvation in East Timor, but by 1981 conditions had improved. The Government allocated US $100m. for development in East Timor in 1981/82. In September 1983, following a five-month cease-fire during which talks took place between Fretilin and the Government, the armed forces launched a major new offensive, following insurgent attacks on them. During 1984 several sources reported that conditions in East Timor had worsened again, with widespread hunger, disease and repression among civilians, and continuing battles between rebels and Indonesian troops. In November 1984 there were reports that Fretilin had begun talks with Portugal and was calling for a negotiated settlement. Official estimates suggest that the population of the region fell by one-sixth between 1974 and 1980.

In May 1977 there was a rebellion in Irian Jaya, said to have been organized by the Free Papua Movement (OPM), which seeks unification with Papua New Guinea. Fighting continued until 1979, when in December, Indonesia and Papua New Guinea finalized a new border administrative agreement. Since then, however, there have been frequent border incidents, and in early 1984 fighting broke out in Jayapura, the capital of Irian Jaya. As a result, about 10,000 refugees fled over the border into Papua New Guinea. Discussions between the Governments of Indonesia and Papua New Guinea concerning the return of the refugees took place during 1984, following a low point in diplomatic relations when Indonesian troops crossed into Papua New Guinea in pursuit of OPM rebels and the violation of its air space by two Indonesian air force jets. In October the two countries signed a five-year agreement which set up a joint border security committee, although by the end of 1984 the question of the repatriation of the refugees had still not been resolved.

Under President Suharto, Indonesia's foreign policy is one of non-alignment, although the country maintains close relations with the West. Indonesia is a member of ASEAN and supports that organization's opposition to Viet-Nam's presence in Kampuchea.

Government

The highest authority of the state is the People's Consultative Assembly, with 920 members who serve for five years. The Assembly includes 460 members of the House of Representatives, the country's legislative organ. The House has 96 appointed members and 364 directly elected representatives. The remaining 460 seats of the Assembly are allocated to government appointees, delegates of regional assemblies and to representatives of parties and groups in proportion to their elected seats in the House. Executive power rests with the President, elected for five years by the Assembly. He governs with the assistance of an appointed Cabinet, responsible to him.

There are 27 provinces, and local government is through a three-tier system of Provincial, Regency and Village Assemblies. Provincial Governors are appointed by the President.

Defence

Military service is selective. In July 1984 the total strength of the armed forces was 281,000 men: army 210,000, navy 42,000 and air force 29,000. There were also a Police Mobile Brigade of 12,000 and about 70,000 militia. Defence expenditure for 1984/85 was budgeted at 697,700m. rupiahs.

Economic Affairs

Indonesia has extensive natural wealth but, with a large and rapidly increasing population, it remains a relatively poor country in terms of average income. The fertile island of Java is one of the most densely populated areas in the world, but some of the other large islands are sparsely inhabited. In 1984 Indonesia's per caput income was US $595, making it a 'middle income' country. The average annual increase in overall GDP, in constant prices, was 3.9% in 1960–70, rising to 7.7% in 1970–82.

The economy is predominantly agricultural. About one-half of the working population are employed in agriculture, forestry and fishing, which together provided 26.4% of Indonesia's GDP in 1983. The staple crop is rice, while oil palm, coconuts, sugar cane and coffee are among the cash crops grown. Indonesia is the world's second largest producer of natural rubber (after Malaysia); production was 1m. metric tons in 1983, compared with 880,000 tons in 1982. In 1983 production of milled rice was a record 23.9m. metric tons, but Indonesia still needed to import an estimated 2m. metric tons of rice to meet its requirements. In 1984 about 400,000 tons of rice were imported, and it was hoped that Indonesia would achieve self-sufficiency by 1985 and become a rice exporter.

About two-thirds of Indonesia's land area is covered by forest, and output of industrial logs reached 28m. cu m in 1979. Since 1980 the country's exports of forest products have slumped, owing to falling demand and restrictions on exporting unprocessed timber (all log exports were to be banned from 1985), and earnings declined from $1,710m. in 1979 to $504m. in 1981/82, and to only $221m. in 1983/84. However, production of plywood has increased significantly since 1975, and Indonesia is now the world's largest exporter. Exports were worth $574m. in 1983/84, compared with $89m. in 1980/81.

Indonesia's principal mineral resource is petroleum, of which it produced a record 615.1m. barrels in 1977. However, output fell to 490m. barrels in 1983, restricted by an OPEC production limit of 1.3m. barrels per day, which was reduced again by 8% in 1984. Revenue from exports of crude petroleum dropped from $14,856m. in 1982, or 66.5% of total exports, to $12,600m., or nearly 60%, in 1983, as a result of the Government's policy to emphasize non-oil exports and of lower world demand. The increasing production of liquefied natural gas (LNG) is a significant development, and Indonesia is the world's leading exporter. Exports of gas were valued at $2,582.8m. in 1983, and output of LNG is projected to triple between 1980 and 1990, when LNG will, it is planned, become Indonesia's prime earner of revenue. Work on the expansion of two LNG plants was completed in 1984. Virtually all exported LNG currently goes to Japan. Tin, bauxite, nickel, copper and coal are also mined. Output of tin was 26,553 metric tons in 1983, making Indonesia the world's third largest producer (after Malaysia and Thailand). The manufacturing sector has developed slowly, contributing only 12.5% of GDP in 1983, in spite of a rapid growth rate (16.1% in 1983). Major branches of manufacturing include petroleum refining, fertilizers, pharmaceuticals, cement and textiles.

Repelita III (1979–84), the third Five-Year Plan, recorded an average annual growth rate of 8%, except for 1982/83, when economic growth was only 2.25%. In 1983/84 growth was 4.5% in real terms. Repelita IV (1984–89) emphasizes expansion of the industry sector and non-oil exports, and forecasts an annual growth rate of 5% (at 1973 prices). Foreign reserves reached a record $12,000m. in April 1981 but fell to $4,810m. by December 1983. By April 1984 they had recovered to $9,000m. Indonesia's development plans have been financed largely by foreign aid. The country receives continuous aid from the Inter-Governmental Group for Indonesia (IGGI). For the fiscal year 1984/85, donor countries pledged $2,460m. In March 1983 the rupiah was devalued by 27.5% against the US dollar in order to bolster foreign exchange reserves and to cushion the effect of falling petroleum revenues. In May 1983 the government cancelled or rescheduled 48 major projects, worth about $21,000m., in order to save foreign reserves and to reduce the balance-of-payments deficit. The current account of the balance of payments recorded a deficit of $7,100m. in 1982/83, easing to about $4,700m. in 1983/84. Inflation reached 21.8% in 1979 but fell to 15.9% in 1980 and to 7.1% in 1981, before rising to 9.7% in 1982 and to 11.9% in 1983.

Since the early 1970s Indonesia has had a surplus on the balance of trade, amounting to $11,892.4m. in 1981 and $5,469.4m. in 1982, falling slightly to $4,794.1m. in 1983. As a result of earlier increases in the price of petroleum and the growth of LNG exports, export trade almost doubled in value between 1977 and 1983 from $10,853m. to $21,146m. Indonesia's inadequate refining capacity has meant that, until recently, much of the country's consumption of refined petroleum products has been imported. However, following the opening of a new hydrocracker plant in early 1984, Indonesia can now produce all its own requirements of refined petroleum. The 1984/85 budget continued the programme of austerity by eliminating food subsidies and raising fuel oil prices.

Indonesia's principal trading partner is Japan, accounting for 23.2% of imports and 45.8% of exports in 1983, followed by the USA and Singapore, which, respectively, accounted for 18.1% and 17.6% of total trade. Indonesia's main imports are machinery, fuel, foodstuffs and iron and steel.

Transport and Communications

Inter-island shipping is conducted by state and private shipping lines, and there are many small craft. There are railways on Java, Madura and Sumatra, totalling 6,947 km (4,317 miles) in 1984. In Java there are adequate roads but on most of the other islands traffic is by jungle track and river boat. A five-year road development programme began in 1982. In 1983 there were 134,000 km (83,000 miles) of roads, of which 55,000 km (34,000 miles) were asphalted. Domestic air services link the major cities, and international services are provided by the state airline, PT Garuda Indonesian Airways, and by many foreign airlines.

Social Welfare

About 10% of the population benefit from a state insurance scheme. Benefits include life insurance and old-age pensions.

In addition, there are two social insurance schemes administered by state corporations, providing pensions and industrial accident insurance. In 1984 Indonesia had 1,246 hospitals (with a total of 103,500 beds), 5,353 community health centres and more than 16,000 other health centres. There were more than 10,000 doctors working in the country. About one-half of the hospitals are privately run.

Education

Education is mainly under the control of the Ministry of Education and Culture, but the Ministry of Religion is in charge of Islamic religious schools at the primary level. Elementary education begins at the age of seven and lasts for six years, followed by six years at the secondary level. Pupils may then study a further three years at the academic level or for five years of higher education. In 1982/83 24.7m. pupils were enrolled in primary schools and 5.7m. in secondary schools. It was hoped to introduce universal compulsory primary education by 1984. Enrolment at secondary schools in 1981 was equivalent to 30% of children aged 13 to 18 (36% of boys; 24% of girls). In 1981 there were 41 state universities and technical institutes, and 448 private universities and institutes. Total enrolment in higher education was 596,781 in 1981. In 1980 the average adult illiteracy rate was 28.2%.

Tourism

Tourism is based mainly on the islands of Java, famous for its volcanic scenery and religious temples, and Bali, renowned for its traditional dancing and religious festivals. In 1983 638,855 tourists visited Indonesia. It is hoped to achieve 1.2m. tourists by the end of Repelita IV.

Public Holidays

1985: 16 May (Ascension), 20 June (Idul Fitr, End of Ramadan), 17 August (Indonesian National Day), 27 August (Idul Adha), 16 September (Islamic New Year), 25 November (Mouloud, Prophet Muhammad's Birthday), 25 December (Christmas Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 28 March (Good Friday), 7 April (Ascension of the Prophet Muhammad).

The Constitution

Indonesia had three provisional constitutions: in August 1945, February 1950 and August 1950. In July 1959 the constitution of 1945 was re-enacted by presidential decree. The General Elections Law of 1969 supplemented the 1945 constitution, which has been adopted permanently by the People's Consultative Assembly. The following is a summary of its main provisions:

GENERAL PRINCIPLES

The 1945 constitution consists of 37 articles, four transitional clauses and two additional provisions, and is preceded by a preamble. The preamble contains an indictment of all forms of colonialism, an account of Indonesia's struggle for independence, the declaration of that independence and a statement of fundamental aims and principles. Indonesia's National Independence, according to the text of the preamble, has the state form of a Republic, with sovereignty residing in the People, and is based upon the Pancasila:

1. Belief in the One Supreme God.
2. Just and Civilized Humanity.
3. The Unity of Indonesia.
4. Democracy led by the wisdom of deliberations (musyawarah) among representatives.
5. Social Justice for all the people of Indonesia.

STATE ORGANS

Majelis Permusyawaratan Rakyat—MPR (People's Consultative Assembly)

Sovereignty is in the hands of the People and is exercised in full by the People's Consultative Assembly as the embodiment of the whole Indonesian People. The Consultative Assembly is the highest authority of the State, and is to be distinguished from the legislative body proper (Dewan Perwakilan Rakyat, see below) which is incorporated within the Consultative Assembly. The Consultative Assembly, with a total of 920 members, is composed of all members of the Dewan, augmented by delegates from the regions and representatives of the functional groups in society (farmers, workers, businessmen, the clergy, intelligentsia, armed forces, students, etc.). The Assembly sits at least once every five years, and its primary competence is to determine the constitution and the broad lines of the policy of the State and the Government. It also elects the President and Vice-President, who are responsible for implementing that policy. All decisions are taken unanimously in keeping with the traditions of musyawarah.

The President

The highest executive of the Government, the President, holds office for a term of five years and may be re-elected. As Mandatory of the MPR he must execute the policy of the State according to the Decrees determined by the MPR during its Fourth General and Special Sessions. In conducting the administration of the State, authority and responsibility are concentrated in the President. The Ministers of the State are his assistants and are responsible only to him.

Dewan Perwakilan Rakyat—DPR (House of Representatives)

The legislative branch of the State, the House of Representatives, sits at least once a year. It has 460 members: 364 elected, 96 appointed from Functional Groups. Every statute requires the approval of the DPR. Members of the House of Representatives have the right to submit draft bills which require ratification by the President, who has the right of veto. In times of emergency the President may enact ordinances which have the force of law, but such Ordinances must be ratified by the House of Representatives during the following session or be revoked.

Dewan Pertimbangan Agung—DPA (Supreme Advisory Council)

The DPA is an advisory body assisting the President who chooses its members from political parties, functional groups and groups of prominent persons.

Mahkamah Agung (Supreme Court)

The judicial branch of the State, the Supreme Court and the other courts of law are independent of the Executive in exercising their judicial powers.

Badan Pemeriksa Keuangan (Supreme Audit Board)

Controls the accountability of public finance, enjoys investigatory powers and is independent of the Executive. Its findings are presented to the DPR.

Judicial System

There is one codified criminal law for the whole of Indonesia. Europeans are subject to the Code of Civil Law published in the State Gazette in 1847. For Indonesians the civil law is the uncodified customary law (Hukum Adat) which varies from region to region. Alien orientals (i.e. Arabs, Indians, etc.) and Chinese are subject to certain parts of the Code of Civil Law and the Code of Commerce. The work of codifying this law has started but in view of the great complexity and diversity of customary law it may be expected to take a considerable time to achieve.

Supreme Court: The final court of appeal (cassation).

Chief Justice: Lt-Gen. Ali Said.

High Courts in Jakarta, Surabaya, Medan, Ujungpandang (Makassar), Banda Aceh, Padang, Palembang, Bandung, Semarang, Banjarmasin, Menado, Denpasar, Ambon and Jayapura deal with appeals from the District Courts.

District Courts deal with marriage, divorce and reconciliation.

Religion

In 1984 an estimated 78% of the population were Muslims, while 11% were Christians, 2% were Hindus and 5% professed adherence to tribal religion.

ISLAM

INSURANCE

Ministry of Finance regulations have limited the number of non-life foreign insurance companies licensed to operate to 12. They were encouraged to conduct their business through local companies, and by 1980, all 12 had merged with one or more domestic companies to form joint ventures. In 1982 a new regulation allowed foreign companies to form joint ventures in the life insurance sector.

In 1984 there were 88 insurance companies, comprising 12 non-life joint venture companies, 53 non-life companies, 15 life companies, 3 reinsurance companies and 5 social insurance companies.

IRAN

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Islamic Republic of Iran lies in western Asia, bordered by the USSR to the north, by Turkey and Iraq to the west, by the Persian (Arabian) Gulf and the Gulf of Oman to the south, and by Pakistan and Afghanistan to the east. The climate is one of great extremes. Summer temperatures of more than 55°C (131°F) have been recorded, but in the winter the great altitude of much of the country results in temperatures of −18°C (0°F) and below. About 50% of the population are Persian, and speak Farsi. Turkic-speaking Azerbaizhanis form about 27% of the population, and Kurds, Arabs, Baluchis and Turkomans form less than 25%. The great majority of Persians and Azerbaizhanis are Shi'i Muslims, while the other ethnic groups are mainly Sunni Muslims. There are also small minorities of Christians (mainly Armenians), Jews and Zoroastrians. The Bahá'í faith, which originated in Iran, has been severely persecuted. The national flag (proportions 3 by 1) has three horizontal stripes, of green, white and red, with the emblem of the Islamic Republic centrally positioned in red and the inscription 'Allaho Akbar' ('God is Great') repeated 22 times at the top and bottom. The capital is Teheran.

Recent History

Iran, called Persia until 1935, was formerly a monarchy, ruled by a Shah (Emperor). The country adopted its first imperial constitution in 1906, when the Qajar dynasty was in power. In 1921 Reza Khan, a Cossack officer, staged a military coup and became Minister of War. In 1923 he became Prime Minister, and in 1925 the National Assembly deposed the Shah and handed full power to Reza Khan. He was subsequently elected Shah, taking the title Reza Shah Pahlavi, and began the modernization of the country. During the Second World War Reza Shah favoured Nazi Germany. British and Soviet forces entered Iran in 1941, forcing the Shah to abdicate in favour of his son, Mohammed Reza Pahlavi.

After the war, British and US forces left Iran, although Soviet forces remained in Azerbaizhan until 1946. The Majlis (National Consultative Assembly) approved the nationalization of the petroleum industry in March 1951. The leading advocate of this measure was Dr Mohammed Mussadeq, leader of the National Front, who became Prime Minister in April 1951. After internal disturbances, Mussadeq was deposed in August 1953 in a coup supported by the USA and other Western countries. The dispute over nationalization was settled in August 1954, when an agreement was reached with foreign interests whereby concessions for petroleum drilling were granted to a consortium of eight companies. The Shah assumed total control of government in 1963, when he began an extensive redistribution of large estates to small farmers. In 1965 the Prime Minister, Hassan Ali Mansur, was assassinated, reportedly by a follower of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, a Shi'i Muslim religious leader (exiled in 1964) who opposed the Shah's 'White Revolution' because it conflicted with traditional Islamic customs. The next Prime Minister was Amir Abbas Hoveida, who held office until 1977.

Between 1965 and 1977 Iran enjoyed political stability and considerable economic growth, based on revenue from petroleum. In March 1975 the Shah introduced a single-party system, based on the Iran National Resurgence Party (Rastakhiz). Opposition became increasingly evident, however, and during 1977 and 1978 demonstrations and strikes against the Shah and, in particular, against his secret police (SAVAK) rose to crisis level. The most effective opposition came from the exiled religious leader, Ayatollah Khomeini, who conducted his campaign from France, where he had arrived in October 1978 after 14 years of exile in Iraq. Khomeini demanded a return to the principles of Islam, and the response to this call in Iran was so great that the Shah felt compelled to leave the country in January 1979. Khomeini arrived in Teheran shortly afterwards, quickly overcame opposition from Dr Shapour Bakhtiar (appointed Prime Minister by the Shah in January) and took power on 11 February. Both houses of the legislature requested their own dissolution. Khomeini appointed a provisional government, with Dr Mehdi Bazargan as Prime Minister, but power rested with the 15-member Islamic Revolutionary Council. Dr Bazargan resigned in November.

Iran quickly cut its ties with the Central Treaty Organization (CENTO) and aligned itself with the Arab world against Israel. Khomeini declared Iran an Islamic Republic on 1 April, and a new Constitution, prepared by an elected Council of Experts, was approved by referendum in December. According to the principle propounded in Khomeini's book Wilayat e Faqih ('Rule of the Theologian'), the Constitution vests supreme authority in the Wali Faqih, a religious leader (initially Khomeini) appointed by the Shi'ite clergy, with no fixed term of office, while the elected President is chief executive. A presidential election in January 1980 resulted in a convincing win for Abolhasan Bani-Sadr, with about 75% of the votes. In February he was sworn in as President, and also became Chairman of the Revolutionary Council. Elections to the 270-seat Majlis (National Assembly) were held in two rounds in March and May 1980, and resulted in a clear win for the Islamic Republican Party (IRP), which was identified with Khomeini.

After the Majlis began its first session in May 1980, the Islamic Revolutionary Council was dissolved. It was clear that a rift was developing between President Bani-Sadr and the more extreme element in the IRP. Bani-Sadr distrusted the Prime Minister, Muhammad Ali Rajai, whom he had reluctantly appointed in August. In March 1981 Ayatollah Khomeini appointed a three-man commission to resolve these differences, but in June Khomeini dismissed Bani-Sadr as Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. Bani-Sadr was dismissed as President a few days later, and subsequently fled to France, where he formed a 'National Council of Resistance' in alliance with Massoud Rajavi, the former leader in Iran of the Mujaheddin Khalq (an Islamic guerrilla group), who had also fled to France. Bani-Sadr left the council in April 1984 because of his objection to Rajavi's increasing co-operation with the Iraqi Government.

Meanwhile, in Iran, political chaos developed. A three-man Presidential Council replaced Bani-Sadr after his dismissal, until new presidential elections could be held in July. In late June, however, a bomb exploded at the headquarters of the IRP, killing Ayatollah Beheshti (the Chief Justice of Iran and leader of the IRP), four Cabinet ministers, six deputy ministers and 20 members of the Majlis.

On 24 July the Presidential elections took place, as arranged, and resulted in a win for the Prime Minister, Muhammad Ali Rajai. Muhammad Javad Bahonar then became Prime Minister in a new administration, introduced to the Majlis on 13 August. A further bomb outrage occurred in late August, this time killing both the President (Rajai) and the Prime Minister (Bahonar). Ayatollah Muhammad Reza Mahdavi Kani became Prime Minister in September, and another round of presidential elections took place on 2 October. Hojatoleslam Ali Khamenei, a leading figure in the IRP, was elected President, winning more than 16m. of the 16.8m. votes cast. Later in October, Mir Hussein Moussavi was appointed Prime Minister. A degree of political stability has since returned, but the Government still regards the activities of the Mujaheddin Khalq as a threat. A Council of Experts, elected in December 1982, is charged with choosing a successor to Ayatollah Khomeini.

Internal political strife has not been the only problem of post-revolutionary Iran. War broke out with Iraq in September 1980, when Iraq invaded Iran over a front of 500 km (300 miles) after a border dispute. The port of Khorramshahr was lost and retaken before Iranian counter-attacks forced the Iraqis to withdraw to their own territory in mid-1982. Since then, the Gulf War, as it is known, has degenerated into a conflict of attrition, with neither side apparently able to launch a decisive offensive. When, beginning in October 1983, Iran staged a series of offensives across its northern border with Iraq, threatening the last outlet for Iraqi exports of petroleum through the Kirkuk pipeline, Iraq intensified its attacks, with missiles and aircraft, against Iranian towns and petroleum installations. With French-built Super Etendard fighters and Exocet missiles, Iraq has threatened to destroy Iran's petroleum industry, centred on Kharg Island in the Gulf. Iran has countered by promising to make the Gulf impassable to all shipping if Iraqi military action destroys its ability to export oil by that route.

The death toll in the war could be as high as 500,000, while damage to property and industry runs into thousands of millions of dollars, but Iran has ignored Iraqi terms for a cease-fire, insisting that nothing less than the removal of the regime of Saddam Hussain, the withdrawal of all Iraqi forces from Iran and the agreement to pay US $160,000m. in war damages can bring an end to hostilities. Iran's apparent plan to prolong the war until the Iraqi economy collapses completely, bringing Hussain down with it, depends for its success on the extent to which Iraq manages to rehabilitate its oil export industry and on how long its main financial backers, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, are willing to continue their support. There were indications in 1984 that they were not prepared to do so indefinitely.

In retaliation for the sale of five Super Etendard fighters to Iraq in 1983, Iran severed most of its economic ties with France: French imports were banned, and French banks were excluded from financing Iranian oil sales.

In February and March 1984 a further Iranian offensive resulted in the capture of marshlands around the southern Iraqi island of Majnoon, the site of rich petroleum deposits. Iraq failed to recapture all the lost territory and was censured internationally for its use of mustard gas in the fighting. A long hiatus ensued, during which Iran was believed to be preparing a massive offensive, involving more than 500,000 men (including thousands of volunteers), in the region of the southern Iraqi port of Basra. The offensive had failed to materialize by the beginning of 1985, preparations having been hampered by renewed fighting with Kurdish separatists, leading, in August 1984, to an assault by government forces in north-west Iran, which diverted men and equipment; and by its very magnitude and, most significantly, by apparent disagreements in the Government as to the long-term conduct of the war. (There is also the generally accepted fact of Iran's military inferiority to Iraq in the quantity and sophistication of its armaments.) Iraq exploited the delay to construct a formidable defensive network along the southern front.

Although it had declared a maritime exclusion zone at the north-east end of the Persian Gulf, enclosing Kharg Island, in August 1982 and made spasmodic attacks against shipping (not only oil tankers but, in some cases, ships well outside the zone), Iraq refrained from attacking tankers using the Kharg terminal until May 1984. By July it had attacked some dozen vessels, regardless of nationality. Iran retaliated by attacking Saudi Arabian and Kuwaiti tankers in the Gulf. A sporadic series of attacks on shipping by both Iran and Iraq has continued, while Iraqi fighter aircraft have inflicted damage on the Kharg Island oil terminal in occasional raids, dating from the end of February 1984. Syria, anxious over supplies of discounted oil from Iran and concerned that the extension of hostilities to the Gulf might draw other contiguous states into the conflict (as Iraq hoped it would), tried, unsuccessfully, to use its influence with Iran to curb attacks on shipping. Despite the relative escalation of the war, however, it remained doubtful whether either Iran or Iraq possessed the capability respectively to close the Strait of Hormuz (between Iran and Oman) to shipping or to destroy Iran's oil export industry, and, if so, whether it was ultimately in either country's interest to use such a capability.

Two peace formulas that were proposed in 1984 by President Mubarak of Egypt, as well as attempts at mediation by Saudi Arabia and Japan, were rejected by Iran, which continues to refuse to negotiate with the Iraqi regime of Saddam Hussain. Iran, which faces growing difficulties in paying for the war, is becoming increasingly isolated. Unlike Iraq, it does not have the financial support of Gulf states and is opposed by both superpowers. With the success of a limited offensive in the central sector of the war front in October 1984, Iran has expelled the Iraqis from almost all of its territory. On the other hand, it has to cope with 1.5m. refugees from the war, 50,000 Iraqi prisoners of war, 200,000 Iraqis exiled from Iraq at the start of the war, and 1.8m. refugees from Afghanistan.

Iran's relations with the USA received a severe setback in November 1979, when Iranian students seized 63 hostages in the US Embassy in Teheran. The original purpose of the seizure was to give support to a demand for the return of the Shah (then in the USA) to Iran to face trial. The problem was not resolved by the death of the Shah in Egypt in July 1980, as the Iranians made other demands. Most important of the new demands was one for a US undertaking not to interfere in the affairs of Iran. Intense diplomatic activity finally resulted in the release of the 52 remaining US hostages in January 1981.

Tension over Iran's ethnic, religious and political minorities, either not in evidence or stifled under the Shah, has been a recurring problem since the revolution. Most serious has been the demand for autonomy from the Kurds in the west, which has often led to open warfare in that area. From July 1983, government forces combined a series of offensives against Iraq, across Iran's northern border, with operations to suppress renewed activity by Kurdish guerrillas in the area. Since June 1981, according to the Mujaheddin Khalq, the Government's suppression of political opposition has involved the execution of more than 40,000 people, the names of 10,231 of whom it published in September 1984. The Iranian Communist Party (the Tudeh Party) was banned in April 1983 and its leaders arrested (later to make televised confessions of having worked for the Soviet Union), while 18 Soviet diplomats were expelled from the country.

In August 1983 the resignation of the Ministers of Commerce and of Labour, followed shortly afterwards by the dismissal of three other Ministers, was the result of factional strife. The outgoing Ministers were right-wing 'bazaaris', the merchant class, who oppose, on grounds of religion and self-interest, the programme of nationalization and land reform that is advocated by the technocrats in the Council of Ministers. Prime Minister Moussavi nominated five replacements from the latter group but only two of them were acceptable to the Majlis, which gave Moussavi three months from September to make alternative choices. New Ministers of Mines and Metals and of Agriculture were finally approved by the Majlis in December, though the Prime Minister's choice of Housing Minister did not receive the necessary support, and the vacancy was not filled until August 1984. The predominantly conservative, clerical Majlis also blocked basic policy initiatives, particularly in the field of economic reform.

Elections to the second Majlis were held on 15 April and 17 May 1984, significantly altering the distribution of influence within the assembly. A high proportion of the 1,230 or more candidates who contested the elections were professional people, such as doctors, scientists and engineers. The elections were boycotted by the Liberation Movement opposition party of the former Prime Minister, Dr Mehdi Bazargan, in protest against the allegedly undemocratic conditions prevailing in Iran. Some 60%–70% of the 24m.–25m. electorate voted in the elections. Although polling had to be repeated in 20 constituencies (owing to irregularities identified by the Council of Guardians, which supervised the elections), the second Majlis was opened on 28 May. It was estimated that more than 50% of the seats in the assembly were filled by new members, and this gave rise to speculation that, with a theoretically more radical and sympathetic Majlis, Prime Minister Moussavi might have greater success in implementing his economic programme. However, the Council of Guardians, which exists to determine whether legislation that has been approved by the Majlis is both constitutional and conforms to Islamic law, is of a conservative, clerical cast and may continue to be an obstacle to socialist economic reform.

In August 1984 Ayatollah Khomeini effectively settled the long-standing debate on the question of the nationalization of foreign trade. Before the Revolution, the 'bazaaris' handled about two-thirds of Iran's domestic trade and one-third of all imports. The Government, which had already curtailed the bazaaris' share of trade, proposed to nationalize foreign trade (partly in order to reduce Iran's growing import bill). Khomeini, contrary to the Constitution (which stipulates the nationalization of foreign trade), spoke in favour of free enterprise and a greater role for the merchants in the economy. He intervened in a similar manner in 1980 to suspend radical reform of land ownership, involving the redistribution of land among peasants.

Moussavi's Cabinet suffered a reverse in August 1984, when, under new legislation requiring a separate vote of confidence for each Minister, five of its members failed to win the approval of the Majlis. Those who were rejected included the Minister of Defence, Col Muhammad Salimi, and the Minister of Education, Ali Akbar Parvaresh, both believed to belong to the right-wing Hojjatieh group. Replacements were approved almost immediately for the Ministries of Industries, Health and Higher Education, and three other vacant portfolios were also filled, but Moussavi took over the Ministry of Defence until a replacement acceptable to the Majlis could be found.

Government

Legislative power is vested in the Islamic Consultative Assembly (Majlis), with 270 members. The chief executive of the administration is the President. The Majlis and the President are both elected by universal adult suffrage for a term of four years. A 12-member Council of Guardians ensures that legislation is in accordance with the Constitution and with Islamic precepts. The executive, legislative and judicial wings of state power are subject to the authority of the Wali Faqih, whose eventual successor will be chosen by the Council of Experts, appointed in December 1982.

Defence

In July 1984 Iran's regular armed forces totalled 555,000 (army 250,000, Revolutionary Guard Corps 250,000, navy 20,000, air force 35,000). Including active paramilitary forces, however, the total strength could be up to 2m. There were 350,000 reserves and more than 2.5m. in paramilitary forces, including 2.5m. in the Home Guard (Hezbollahi). There is a two-year period of military service. Defence expenditure for 1983/84 is estimated at IR 1,500,000m.

Economic Affairs

Before the Islamic revolution and the Gulf War, Iran was one of the world's leading producers of petroleum, and massive government revenues from the petroleum industry stimulated the rest of the economy. Although industrial activity now predominates over agriculture in the formation of the gross national product (GNP), agriculture still occupies the largest proportion of the total labour force. Cereals, sugar beet, fruits, nuts and vegetables are grown. Dairy produce, wool, hair and hides are also produced. There is a small fishing industry, both in the Caspian Sea, where caviar (Iran's biggest export earner after petroleum) is obtained, and in the Persian Gulf. Forests cover more than 20m. ha. There are considerable deposits of copper and iron ore. A major copper complex at Sar Cheshmeh opened in May 1982, and by the end of 1984 was only 5,000 tons short of its operating capacity of 145,000 tons per year.

The Islamic revolution of 1978–79, the Gulf War which began in 1980, and the political troubles of 1981 have hampered the economy considerably. Petroleum remains predominant but production, which averaged about 6m. barrels per day (b/d) in 1976, fell to 5.2m. b/d in 1978 and to 3.1m. b/d in 1979. It was generally accepted that production was recovering in 1980, but the onset of the Gulf War in September 1980 seriously affected output, and production in 1980/81 averaged only 1.5m. b/d, falling to 1.3m. b/d in 1981/82, and to 400,000 b/d in 1982/83. Government revenue from petroleum fell from US $23,000m. in 1977/78 to $8,500m. in 1981/82, but recovered to $19,000m. in 1982/83 and was about $18,000m. in 1983/84.

Unlike Iraq, Iran, since the depressed state of production in the first two years of the war, has managed to maintain its exports of petroleum at a comparatively high level (an average 1.7m. b/d in 1983/84) in spite of the damage to wells, refineries and export terminals which has been caused by the war. The most important buyers of Iranian oil are Japan (which accounts for about 20% of oil exports), Italy, Romania and the Federal Republic of Germany. So successful was Iran in raising its production after the low point of 1982 that in November 1983 it was calling for a 33% increase in its official OPEC production quota from 2.4m. b/d to 3.2m. b/d, though it subsequently agreed to abide by the OPEC allocation.

Iraq refrained from attacking tankers using the Kharg Island oil terminal until May 1984. The terminal itself has since come under attack, causing the loss in August of about one-third of the installed capacity of 6.5m. b/d, though the remaining capacity is sufficient to maintain Iran's exports at their post-Revolution levels. Potentially a greater threat to oil exports has been the effect of the war on tanker insurance in the Gulf. Charges on vessels destined for Kharg Island rose to 7.5% of hull value in mid-1984 (10 times the premium at the beginning of the year), and in May Japan instructed its tankers not to use Kharg Island. As a consequence, exports in May were 1m. b/d, compared with an OPEC quota of 1.7m. b/d. Iran has been forced to reduce its prices to retain its customers, ignoring the official OPEC price ($29 per barrel in 1984). Although, in March 1983, OPEC had given tacit approval to prices $1.50 below official levels, Iran was reportedly offering oil at $25.40 per barrel in September and October 1984, as well as undertaking to pay shipping and insurance costs. Insurance premiums for war risk dropped to 3% of hull value in August 1984, and Japanese tankers returned to Kharg Island after a three-month absence. (Despite more than 80 missile attacks on shipping up to August 1984, only two vessels had been lost.) In the periods when customers have been available, Iran has flouted OPEC quotas in order to maximize its earnings of foreign exchange while the Kharg Island terminal remains operational. Exports increased to 2.3m. b/d in July, when domestic consumption was estimated at 800,000 b/d, putting total output at some 3.1m. b/d. Production was cut by about 50% in September and October, not (according to the Minister of Oil) owing to the effects of the war but in order to prevent a collapse in oil prices and to strengthen OPEC during the world oil glut. Subsequently, Iran agreed to a reduction in its OPEC production quota from 2.4m. b/d to 2.3m. b/d. In November 1984, after a three-month period during which Iran had refused to offer large discounts to all but its most important customers, and as foreign reserves were falling (to an estimated $4,000m. in November), an export drive was launched, and price discounts returned. At the beginning of December oil exports were up to more than 2m. b/d. The export drive coincided with a seven-week lull in Iraqi attacks on shipping from 19 October, and, at the end of November, the minimum war risk insurance rate for vessels bound for Kharg Island was reduced to 2%. The Kharg Island jetty which serves the largest tankers became operational again in November, having been out of action since June, when it was damaged in an air raid.

A resumption of Iraqi attacks on shipping in December caused insurance rates to rise sharply before another lull brought about reductions. Iran responded to these renewed attacks by deciding to offer rebates for increased shipping costs for transporting its oil, rather than simple discounts, and in January increased its oil prices, realigning them more closely with those of other OPEC producers. It remained to be seen whether this arrangement would be sufficiently attractive for customers to risk the safety of their vessels in the war zone. Japan almost immediately asked for a $4 per barrel discount instead of the $2.50 which it was being offered.

At least $15,000m. appears to have been budgeted for the expansion of the petroleum and petrochemical industries during the five years from 1984/85, the first stage of a 20-year plan. There are plans for five new petroleum refineries. The main Abadan refinery was destroyed in the war, and another was put out of action, reducing refinery capacity to 555,000 b/d. This figure could rise to between 800,000 b/d and 1m. b/d when the planned refineries come into operation in the early 1990s. The average production of Iran's refineries during December 1984 was 727,654 b/d. Iran is preparing to exploit petroleum reserves (estimated at 8,000m. barrels) in deposits around the Majnoon islands, taken from Iraq in February 1984. The $4,000m. joint Iran/Japan petrochemicals complex at Bandar Khomeini, construction of which has repeatedly been suspended (owing to Iraqi air raids, which have caused damage costing in excess of $500m.), is now due for completion in 1989.

According to Prime Minister Moussavi, some 30% of the 1983/84 budget, totalling an estimated IR 3,600,000m. ($42,400m.), was spent on the war effort. This expenditure rose in 1984/85 to IR 1,303,000m., or 31% of the budget. For 1985/86 IR 400,000m. have been allocated to basic war expenditure, with other war-related allocations set at IR 785,500m. (a total of IR 1,185,500m., or 30.6% of the proposed budget of IR 3,868,700m.). The cost of war damage was put at $160,000m. in February 1983. In spite of the cost of the war, and the effect of economic boycotts and of internal troubles since the Islamic revolution, there were signs in 1983 that the Iranian economy, which declined in 1979/80 and 1980/81, was growing again. According to Moussavi, Iran's GNP increased, in real terms, by 15.2% in the fiscal year 1982/83, when growth in the industrial sector was 14.8%. In the same year, Iran had a currency surplus of about $6,000m. and total foreign reserves of $9,500m. The reserve figure fluctuates, however, according to the level of petroleum sales, which have varied with the intensity of Iraqi attacks on Gulf shipping. Since the beginning of the war, average petroleum exports have been in the range 200,000 b/d–3m. b/d. The country's foreign debt has fallen to between $500m. and $1,000m. from $15,000m. at the time of the revolution, meaning that Iran has managed to fight the war with Iraq without borrowing from abroad. Trade with the West is now increasing steadily, in view of the unexpectedly favourable state of Iran's finances, in particular with Federal Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and Italy, and there are signs of improving trade relations with the USA. With the cost of the war and a burgeoning 'black market', inflation has been a persistent problem for the economy. The official rate of inflation has actually fallen from 32.5% in 1980/81 to 17% in 1983/84. In December 1984, however, the rate of inflation was believed to be considerably higher than the officially quoted figure of 12.3%. Proposed expenditure in the budget for 1984/85 was cut by the Majlis, partly in an attempt to reduce inflation and an anticipated budget deficit of $10,000m. In early 1985 the budget for 1985/86 faced similar cuts, as oil exports in 1984 had fallen well below Iran's OPEC quota and there were calls for austerity measures to be introduced.

The Islamic Republic's first five-year development plan was unveiled in August 1983. It is intended as the first step towards quadrupling the gross domestic product (GDP) from IR 8,800,000m. ($103,000m.) in 1982/83 to IR 34,000,000m. ($400,000m.) in 2002/03. The plan, covering the years 1983/84–1987/88, gives priority to the development of the agricultural sector, its proportion of GDP being envisaged to grow at an average annual rate of 7%, with total investment of $26,400m. over the period of the plan. The Government's long-term objective is to secure economic independence for Iran by achieving self-sufficiency in food and by reducing the dependence on the petroleum sector. It is a measure of the scale of the task that, if the plan's targets are met, the respective shares of oil and non-oil sales in total exports will alter from 97% and 3% in 1983/84 to 92.9% and 7.1% by 1987/88. In 1983/84 non-oil exports totalled 224,000 tons, worth an estimated IR 30,860m. ($339.5m.), which represented an increase of 38% by volume and 64% by value, compared with 1982/83.

Total investment during the plan is set at IR 14,191,300m. ($181,900m.). The average annual growth rate of GDP is expected to be 8.9% (7% excluding oil) during the plan period, with GDP per head increasing at a rate of 5.8% (3.9% excluding oil). Meanwhile, Iran's GNP is projected to grow by an average 8.7% per year during the plan period, and is calculated to have a potential for growth of 7% per year until the end of the century. The plan was undergoing revision in early 1985.

Following the June 1979 nationalization of banking and insurance, the Government announced in 1980 the establishment of an Islamic banking system, which officially came into force from 21 March 1984. Interest on loans is to be replaced by a 4% commission and interest on deposits with profits, though it seems unlikely that the new system will be fully implemented for several years.

Transport and Communications

There are more than 4,500 km (2,800 miles) of railways, while extensions are under construction and electrification is planned. There are more than 72,000 km (44,500 miles) of paved and gravel roads. The main terminal for oil exports is Kharg Island. The principal non-oil ports on the Persian Gulf are Bushehr, Lingah, Bandar Abbas and Bandar Khomeini. Khorramshahr, Iran's biggest non-oil port, was destroyed in the Gulf war. Ports on the Caspian Sea are Bandar Turkman and Bandar Anzali. The Airline of the Islamic Republic of Iran provides internal and international air services.

Social Welfare

Under Article 29 of the 1979 Constitution, the Government has a duty to provide every citizen with insurance benefits covering illness, unemployment and retirement. In 1979 there were 16,200 physicians working in Iran.

Education

Primary education for five years, beginning at six years of age, is free and compulsory for both sexes, but this has not been fully implemented in rural areas. Secondary education, from the age of 11, lasts for up to seven years: a first cycle of three years and a second of four years. As a proportion of school-age children, enrolment at primary and secondary schools in 1981 was 68% (boys 81%; girls 55%). There are 22 universities, which are gradually reopening after the revolution. About 45,000 students were admitted to colleges and universities for the academic year 1984/85. In 1976 adult illiteracy averaged 63.8% (males 52.4%; females 75.7%). Post-revolutionary policy has been to eliminate mixed-sex schools and to reduce instruction in art and music. According to the Government, 24,000 schools were built between the Revolution, in 1979, and 1984.

Tourism

Tourism has been badly affected by the political upheaval. Iran's chief attraction for the tourist is its wealth of historical sites, notably Isfahan, Rasht, Tabriz, Susa and Persepolis. There were 62,373 visitors to Iran in 1982.

Public Holidays

The Iranian year 1364 runs from 21 March 1985 to 20 March 1986, and the year 1365 runs from 21 March 1986 to 20 March 1987.

1985: 5 June (Revolution Day), 9 June (Birthday of Twelfth Imam), 20 June (Id ul Fitr), 14 July (Martyrdom of Imam Ali), 27 August (Id ul Adha), 25 September (Ashoura), 25 November (Mouloud, Birth of Muhammad).

1986: 11 February (National Day—Fall of the Shah), 20 March (Oil Nationalization Day), 21–24 March (Now Ruz, the Iranian New Year), 1 April (Islamic Republic Day), 2 April (Revolution Day).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force, but some traditional units are still in general use.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 dinars = 1 Iranian rial (IR).

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = 109.136 rials;
US $1 = 94.164 rials.

The Constitution

A draft Constitution for the Islamic Republic of Iran was published on 18 June 1979. It was submitted to a 'Council of Experts', elected by popular vote on 3 August 1979, to debate the various clauses and to propose amendments. The amended Constitution was approved by a referendum on 2–3 December 1979.

The Constitution states that the form of government of Iran is that of an Islamic Republic, and that the spirituality and ethics of Islam are to be the basis for political, social and economic relations. Persians, Turks, Kurds, Arabs, Baluchis, Turkomans and others will enjoy completely equal rights.

The Constitution provides for a President to act as chief executive. The President is elected by universal adult suffrage for a term of four years. Legislative power is held by the Majlis (Islamic Consultative Assembly), with 270 members who are similarly elected for a four-year term. Provision is made for the representation of Zoroastrians, Jews and Christians.

All legislation passed by the Islamic Consultative Assembly must be sent to the Council for the Protection of the Constitution (Article 94), which will ensure that it is in accordance with the Constitution and Islamic legislation. The Council for the Protection of the Constitution consists of six religious lawyers appointed by the Faqih (see below) and six lawyers appointed by the High Council of the Judiciary and approved by the Islamic Consultative Assembly. Articles 19–42 deal with the basic rights of individuals, and provide for equality of men and women before the law and for equal human, political, economic, social and cultural rights for both sexes.

The press is free, except in matters that are contrary to public morality or insult religious belief. The formation of religious, political and professional parties, associations and societies is free, provided they do not negate the principles of independence, freedom, sovereignty and national unity, or the basis of Islam.

The amended Constitution contains a significant change from the earlier draft. It provides for a Wali Faqih (religious leader) who, in the absence of the Imam Mehdi (the hidden Twelfth Imam), carries the burden of leadership. Article 107 gives Ayatollah Khomeini these powers for the rest of his natural life. Thereafter, an elected Council of Experts will choose an individual or three or five people to form a council of leadership, and the choice must be 'approved by the nation'. According to Article 57 the executive, legislative and judicial branches of state power are under the authority of the Faqih. Among the extensive powers reserved to the Faqih is the right to appoint half the members of the Council for the Protection of the Constitution (see above). He is also Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and can appoint the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Head of the Revolutionary Guard. He appoints four of the seven members of the National Defence Council and, on their recommendation, appoints the senior commanders of the armed forces. He also has power to declare war and make peace on the recommendation of the National Defence Council. The first Faqih has the right to vet all candidates for the presidency (a right which was exercised by Ayatollah Khomeini). The Faqih can also dismiss the President on the basis of a Supreme Court decision or a vote of no confidence by the Islamic Consultative Assembly.

PROVINCIAL DIVISIONS

According to the latest state division (May 1977), Iran is divided into 23 provinces (Ostans), 472 counties (shahrestan) and 499 municipalities (bakhsh).

Sazmane Peykar dar Rahe Azadieh Tabaqe Kargar (Organization Struggling for the Freedom of the Working Class): Marxist-Leninist.

Tudeh Party (Communist): f. 1941; declared illegal 1949; came into open 1979, banned again April 1983; pro-Moscow; First Sec. Nureddin Kianuri (under arrest); Provisional Leader Ali Khavari reportedly elected mid-1984.

The National Council of Resistance was formed in Paris in October 1981 by former President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr and Massoud Rajavi, the former leader of the Mujaheddin Khalq in Iran. In 1984 the Council comprised 15 opposition groups, operating either clandestinely in Iran or from exile abroad. Bani-Sadr left the Council in 1984 because of his objection to Rajavi's growing links with the Iraqi Government. There is also a National Movement of Iranian Resistance, led by a former Prime Minister, Dr Shapour Bakhtiar.

Judicial System

In August 1982 the Supreme Court revoked all laws dating from the previous regime which did not conform with Islam. In October 1982 all courts set up prior to the Islamic Revolution were abolished. A new system of qisas (retribution) is being established, where the emphasis is on speedy justice. More than a thousand itinerant justices have been set up to tour the country, deciding cases on the spot and dispensing immediate punishment. In 1984 there was a total of 2,200 judges. One hundred and nine offences carry the death penalty. The aim is to keep imprisonment to the minimum. In January 1983, however, investigative teams were set up to ensure that the judiciary did not exceed its authority. The new Supreme Court has 16 branches. In 1984 the office of Islamic Revolution prosecutor and that of prosecutor-general were merged.

SUPREME COURT

Chief Justice: Ayatollah Abdolkarim Mousavi Ardebili.

Prosecutor-General: Youssef Sanei.

Head of Military Revolutionary Courts and Head of Drug Offences Court: Hojatoleslam Mokhdai.

Administrative Tribunal: President Muhammad Yazdi.

Religion

According to the 1979 Constitution, the official religion is Islam of the Ja'fari sect (Shi'ite), but other Islamic sects, including Zeydi, Hanafi, Maleki, Shafe'i and Hanbali, will be valid and respected. Zoroastrians, Jews and Christians will be recognized as official religious minorities. According to the 1976 census, there were then 310,000 Christians (mainly Armenian), 80,000 Jews and 30,000 Zoroastrians.

ISLAM

The great majority of the Iranian people are Shi'i Muslims, but there is a minority of Sunni Muslims. Persians and Azerbaizhanis are mainly Shi'i, while the other ethnic groups are mainly Sunni.

During 1978 there was a revival of the influence of the Ayatollahs (or senior Shi'ite divines). Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini of Qom, who had been exiled to Iraq in 1964 and moved to near Paris in October 1978, conducted a campaign of opposition to the Shah, returning to Iran in February 1979 and bringing about the downfall of the Shah's regime. Other important Ayatollahs include Ayatollah Abdolkarim Musavi Ardebili, Ayatollah Hossein Ali Montazari of Teheran and the Ayatollahs Shariatmadari, Marashi-Najani and Golpayegani of Qom.

CHRISTIANITY

Roman Catholic (Chaldean) Archbishop of Teheran: Ave Forsat 91, Teheran; tel. 823549; Most Rev. Youhannan Semaan Issayi; 8,000 Catholics (1984).

Anglican Bishop in Iran and President-Bishop, Episcopal Church in Jerusalem and the Middle East: Rt Rev. H. B. Dehqani-Tafti, Bishop's House, POB 12, Isfahan; Diocese founded 1912.

Synod of the Evangelical (Presbyterian) Church in Iran: Assyrian Evangelical Church, Khiaban-i Hanifnejad, Khiaban-i Aramanch, Teheran; Moderator Rev. Adle Nakhosteen.

ZOROASTRIANS

There are about 30,000 Zoroastrians, a remnant of a once widespread sect. Their religious leader is Moubad.

OTHER COMMUNITIES

Communities of Armenians, and somewhat smaller numbers of Jews, Assyrians, Greek Orthodox Christians, Uniates and Latin Christians are also found as officially recognized faiths. The Bahá'í faith, which originated in Iran, has about 300,000 Iranian adherents, although at least 10,000 are believed to have fled since 1979 in order to escape persecution. The Government banned all Bahá'í institutions in August 1983.

The Press

Teheran dominates the press scene as many of the daily papers are published there and the bi-weekly, weekly and less frequent publications in the provinces generally depend on the major metropolitan dailies as a source of news. A press law which was announced in August 1979 required all newspapers and magazines to be licensed and imposed penalties of imprisonment for insulting senior religious figures. Offences against the Act will be tried in the criminal courts. In the Constitution which was approved in December 1979, the press is free, except in matters that are contrary to public morality, insult religious belief or slander the honour and reputation of individuals. Many of the papers which were published under the Shah's regime ceased publication after the revolution. In August 1980 Ayatollah Khomeini issued directives which indicated that censorship would be tightened up, and several papers were closed down in 1981.

BANKING

Banks were nationalized in June 1979 and a revised banking system has been introduced consisting of nine banks. Three banks were reorganized, two resulted from mergers of existing banks, three specialize in industry and agriculture and one, the Islamic Bank (now Islamic Economy Organization) set up in May 1979, was exempt from nationalization. A change-over to an Islamic banking system, with interest being replaced by a 4% commission on loans, began on 21 March 1984 and will take several years to complete.

Although the number of foreign banks operating in Iran has fallen dramatically since the Revolution, some 30 are still represented. Since the exclusion of French banks from the Iranian market at the end of 1983, Federal German, Swiss, Japanese and British banks have been responsible for about 30% of total trade financing.

RAILWAYS

Iranian State Railway: Rahe-Ahan Sq., Teheran; tel. 555120; telex 213103; f. 1938; Pres. S. ABOULHASAN H. KHAMOUSHI; Vice-Pres. HOSEIN TEHERANI (Admin. and Finance), ABDOL MAJIDE AFZAL (Technical Exploitation), S. AFSHAR (Planning and Technical Studies), M. M. KHALILY (Construction and Renovation).

The Iranian railway system, which is generally single-tracked, includes the following main routes:

Trans-Iranian Railway runs 1,392 km from Bandar Turkman on the Caspian Sea in the north, through Teheran, and south to Bandar Imam Khomeini on the Persian Gulf.

Southern Line links Teheran to Khorramshahr via Qom, Arak, Dorood, Andimeshk and Ahwaz; 937 km.

Northern Line links Teheran to Gorgan via Garmsar, Firooz Kooh and Sari; 499 km.

Teheran–Kerman Line via Kashan, Yazd and Zarand; 1,106 km.

Teheran–Tabriz Line linking with the Azerbaizhan Railway; 736 km.

Tabriz–Djulfa Electric Line: 146 km.

Garmsar–Meshed Line connects Teheran with Meshed via Semnan, Damghan, Shahrud and Nishabur; 812 km.

Qom–Zahedan Line when completed will be an intercontinental line linking Europe and Turkey, through Iran, with India. Zahedan is situated 91.7 km west of the Baluchistan frontier, and is the end of the Pakistani broad gauge railway. The section at present links Qom to Kerman via Kashan, Sistan, Yazd, Bafq and Zarand; 1,005 km. A branch line from Sistan was opened in 1971 via Isfahan to the steel mill at Folad Shahr; 112 km.

Ahwaz–Bandar Khomeini Line connects Bandar Khomeini with the Trans-Iranian railway at Ahwaz; this line is due to be double-tracked; 112 km.

Azerbaizhan Railway extends from Tabriz to Djulfa (146.5 km), meeting the Caucasian railways at the Soviet frontier. Electrification works for this section have been completed and the electrified line was opened in April 1982. A standard gauge railway line (139 km) extends from Tabriz (via Sharaf–Khaneh) to the Turkish frontier at Razi.

A 730-km line to link Bandar Abbas and Bafq has been under construction since 1982. The total length of main lines is 4,567 km. There are plans to add 1,300 km to the system by 1989.

Underground Railway. An agreement was signed in March 1976 between the Municipality of Teheran and French contractors for the construction of a subway. Four lines are to be built with a total length of 143 km. Construction began during 1978, but the project has been in abeyance since the revolution in 1979.

ROADS

In 1984 there were 457 km of motorways, 14,921 km of paved main roads, 18,448 km of paved feeder roads, 38,315 km of gravel roads and 37,296 km of earth roads. There is a paved highway (A1) from Bazargan on the Turkish border to the Afghanistan border. The A2 highway runs from the Iraqi border to Mir Javeh on the Pakistan border; 2,220 km of the A2 has been completed, and the remaining 80 km are under construction.

Ministry of Roads and Transport: Ministry of Roads and Transport, 49 Taleghani Ave, Teheran; tel. 646770.

INLAND WATERWAYS

Principal waterways:

Lake Rezaiyeh (Lake Urmia) 80 km west of Tabriz in North-West Iran; and River Karun flowing south through the oilfields into the River Shatt el-Arab, thence to the head of the Persian Gulf near Abadan.

Lake Rezaiyeh: From Sharafkhaneh to Golmankhaneh there is a twice-weekly service of tugs and barges for transport of passengers and goods.

River Karun: Regular cargo service is operated by the Mesopotamia-Iran Corpn Ltd. Iranian firms also operate daily motor-boat services for passengers and goods.

SHIPPING

Persian Gulf: The main oil terminal is at Kharg Island. The principal non-oil ports were Khorramshahr, Bushehr, Bandar Abbas and Bandar Khomeini but only Bandar Abbas was in operation during 1983. A project to develop Bandar Abbas port, which predates the Islamic Revolution and was originally to cost IR 1,900,000m., is still in progress. Khorramshahr, Iran's biggest port, was completely destroyed in the Gulf war, and Bushehr and Bandar Khomeini are also out of use as a result of war damage.

Caspian Sea: Principal port Bandar Turkman. Bandar Anzali (formerly Bandar Pahlavi) is growing in importance.

Ports and Shipping Organization: Dir Eng. Ali Mahmudi.

Islamic Republic of Iran Shipping Lines: POB 353, Arya Building, 127 Ghaem Magham Farahani Ave, Teheran; tel. 833061; telex 2400; f. 1967; affiliated to the Ministry of Commerce March 1984; 72 vessels; liner services between the Persian Gulf and Europe, the Far East and South America; Chair. and Man. Dir Muhammad Souri.

Irano-Hind Shipping Co: joint venture with India; fleet of 12 vessels.

CIVIL AVIATION

The two main international airports are Mehrabad (Teheran) and Abadan. An airport was opened at Isfahan in July 1983 and work on a new international airport, 40 km south of Teheran, abandoned in 1979, was due to be resumed in late 1984. In addition, airports at Ardebil, Sari and Meshed are to be expanded to take heavy aircraft.

Airline of the Islamic Republic of Iran (Iran Air): Iran Air Building, Mehrabad Airport, Teheran; telex 212975; f. 1962; Man. Dir M. Sepehri-Rad; serves Persian Gulf area, Istanbul, Athens, Frankfurt, Geneva, London, Paris, Rome, Vienna, Tokyo, Beijing, Karachi, Madrid, Damascus and Bombay; fleet of 2 Boeing 747-200B, 1 Boeing 747-100B, 2 Boeing 747-200F, 4 Boeing 747-SP, 1 Boeing 707-320B, 4 Boeing 707-320C, 6 Airbus A300B2-203, 5 Boeing 727-200, 2 Boeing 727-100, 2 Boeing 737-200, 2 Boeing 737-200C.

Iranian Asseman Airlines: POB 13145-1476; Mehrabad Airport, Teheran; f. 1953; Man. Dir M. H. Shahangian; domestic routes and charter services; fleet of 2 Fokker F27-600, 2 FH 227B, 7 Turbo Commander, 12 Aero Commander, 3 Piper Chieftain, 3 Islander.

Tourism

Tourism has suffered considerably from the disturbances caused by the revolution and the war with Iraq. The Islamic element in Iranian cultural life is now encouraged, and Western influences are discouraged.

Atomic Energy

Atomic Energy Organization of Iran: POB 14155-1339, Teheran; f. 1973; originally set up to produce nuclear power to provide for the base load electricity needs of the country; main aim now is the exploration and exploitation of uranium; to secure fuel needs of Iran's nuclear energy programme; to utilize nuclear energy in industry, agriculture and medicine; to provide research and development work and training for greater national self-sufficiency in nuclear science technology; Bushehr nuclear power plant, a pressurized water reactor (two 1,200 MW units), being built by Kraftwerk Union AG of the Federal Republic of Germany, is scheduled for completion by 1988; Pres. Reza Amrollahi.

Isfahan Nuclear Technology Centre (INTC): Isfahan; f. pre-Revolution; technological assistance to industry; a sub-critical research reactor was scheduled to begin operation in March 1985; a zero-power reactor is planned.

Teheran University Nuclear Centre: Institute of Nuclear Science and Technology, POB 2989, Teheran; f. 1958; research in nuclear physics, electronics, nuclear chemistry, radiobiology and nuclear engineering; training and advice on nuclear science and the peaceful applications of atomic energy; a 5-MW pool-type research reactor on the new campus of Teheran University went critical in November 1967; a 3-MeV Van de Graaff-type accelerator became operational in 1972; Dir Dr J. Moghimi.

IRAQ

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Iraq is an almost land-locked state in western Asia, with a narrow outlet to the sea on the Persian (Arabian) Gulf. Its neighbours are Iran to the east, Turkey to the north, Syria and Jordan to the west, and Saudi Arabia and Kuwait to the south. The climate is extreme, with hot, dry summers, when temperatures may exceed 43°C (109°F), and cold winters, especially in the highlands. Summers are humid near the Persian Gulf. The official language is Arabic, spoken by about 80% of the population. About 15% speak Kurdish, while there is a small Turkoman-speaking minority. About 95% of the population are Muslims, of whom more than 50% belong to the Shi'ite sect. However, the regime which came to power in 1968 has been dominated by members of the Sunni sect. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three equal horizontal stripes, of red, white and black, with three five-pointed green stars on the central white stripe. The capital is Baghdad.

Recent History

Iraq was formerly part of Turkey's Ottoman Empire. During the First World War (1914–18) the territory was captured by British forces. In 1920 Iraq was placed under a League of Nations mandate, administered by the United Kingdom. In 1921 Amir Faisal ibn Hussain, a member of the Hashemite dynasty of Arabia, was proclaimed King. During its early years the new kingdom was faced by Kurdish revolts (1922–32) and by border disputes in the south. The leading personality in Iraqi political life under the monarchy was Gen. Nuri es-Said, who became Prime Minister in 1930 and held the office for seven terms, over a period of 28 years. He strongly supported Iraq's friendship with the United Kingdom and with the West in general. After prolonged negotiations, a 25-year Anglo-Iraqi Treaty of Alliance was signed in 1930. The British mandate ended on 3 October 1932, when Iraq became fully independent.

King Faisal I died in 1933 and was succeeded by his son, Ghazi. In 1939, however, King Ghazi was killed in a motor accident. The new king, Faisal II, was only three years old at the time of his accession, and his uncle, Prince Abdul Ilah, acted as regent until 1953, when the king assumed full powers. Like Gen. Nuri, Prince Abdul Ilah was pro-Western in outlook. An attempted pro-Nazi coup in May 1941 was thwarted by the intervention of British forces. Despite nationalist opposition, Iraq declared war on Germany and Italy in January 1943. British troops were withdrawn in October 1947, although a British air base remained until 1959. Iraqi forces participated in the Arab–Israeli war of 1948–49. The Constitutional Union Party, founded by Gen. Nuri in 1949, became the sole legal party in 1953, after all opposition groups were banned. In 1955 Iraq signed the Baghdad Pact, an agreement on collective regional security against a possible threat from the USSR.

In February 1958 Iraq and Jordan formed an Arab Federation, with King Faisal of Iraq as its Head of State. In March Gen. Nuri resigned as Iraqi Prime Minister to become Prime Minister of the new union. On 14 July, however, a military revolution overthrew the Iraqi monarchy. King Faisal, Prince Abdul Ilah and Gen. Nuri were all killed. The victorious rebels abolished the 1925 Constitution, dissolved the legislature and proclaimed a republic, with Brig. (later Lt-Gen.) Abdul Karim Kassem at the head of a left-wing nationalist regime. Iraq withdrew from the Baghdad Pact in March 1959. For more than four years, Kassem maintained a precarious and increasingly isolated position, opposed by Pan-Arabs, Kurds and other groups. In February 1963 the Pan-Arab element in the armed forces staged a coup in which Kassem was killed. A new government was set up under Col (later Field Marshal) Abdul Salem Muhammad Aref, who had briefly held office as Deputy Prime Minister after the 1958 revolution. President Aref initiated a policy of closer relations with the United Arab Republic (Egypt). Martial law, in force since 1958, was brought to an end in January 1965, and a purely civilian government was inaugurated in September 1965. President Aref was killed in an air accident in March 1966, and was succeeded by his brother, Major-Gen. Abdul Rahman Muhammad Aref. Iraq declared war on Israel at the outbreak of the Six-Day War in June 1967, but Iraqi forces were not involved in the conflict. The second President Aref was ousted by members of the Arab Socialist Renaissance (Baath) Party on 17 July 1968. Major-Gen. (later Field Marshal) Ahmed Hassan al-Bakr, a former Prime Minister, became President and Prime Minister, and supreme authority was vested in the Revolutionary Command Council (RCC), of which President al-Bakr was also Chairman. Provisional constitutions, proclaiming socialist principles, were introduced in September 1968 and July 1970. A National Charter, to be the basis of a permanent constitution, was issued in November 1971. This envisaged an elected National Assembly but, until the Assembly's formation, power remained with the RCC.

Relations with the Syrian Government deteriorated after a younger generation of Baathists seized power in Syria in 1970. Except for a period in 1978–79, bitter rivalry has existed between Syrian and Iraqi Baathists. Relations with Syria dramatically improved in October 1978, when President Assad of Syria visited Baghdad. Plans were announced for eventual complete political and economic union of the two countries. Economic difficulties, such as the dispute over water from the Euphrates river, were soon settled but progress on political union was slow. On 16 July 1979 the Vice-Chairman of the RCC, Saddam Hussain, who had long been the real power in Iraq, replaced Bakr as Chairman, and also as President of Iraq. A few days later, an attempted coup was reported and several members of the RCC were executed for their alleged part in the plot. The suspicion of Syrian implication put an end to all further talk of political union between Iraq and Syria, but economic co-operation continued.

During 1979 the National Progressive Front, an alliance of Baathists and Communists, broke up amid accusations from communist sources that the Baathists were conducting a 'reign of terror'. In February 1980 President Hussain announced his 'National Charter', reaffirming the principles of non-alignment. In June elections, the first since the 1958 revolution, were held for a 250-member National Assembly (to perform legislative duties alongside the RCC), followed in September by elections for a 50-member Kurdish Legislative Council.

Relations with Iran, precarious for many years, developed into full-scale war in September 1980. Prior to 1975, Iran had been supporting a rebellion by Kurds in northern Iraq. An agreement between Iran and Iraq, signed in 1975, defined the border between the two countries as running down the middle of the Shatt al-Arab waterway, and also virtually ended the Kurdish rebellion by depriving it of Iranian support. In the years after 1975, however, Iraq grew increasingly dissatisfied with the 1975 agreement. Iraq also wanted the withdrawal of Iranian forces from Abu Musa and Tumb islands, which Iran occupied in 1971.

The Iranian revolution of 1979 exacerbated these grievances. Conflict soon developed over Arab demands for autonomy in Iran's Khuzestan region (named 'Arabistan' by Arabs), which Iran accused Iraq of encouraging. Iraq's Sunni leadership was suspicious of Shi'ite Iran, and feared that trouble might arise from its own Shi'ites, who form more than 50% of the population. Border squabbling took place between Iraq and Iran in the summer of 1980, and more extensive fighting began after Iran ignored Iraqi diplomatic efforts, demanding the withdrawal of Iranian forces from the border area of Zain ul-Qos in Diali province. Iraq maintained that this area should have been returned under the 1975 agreement, which Iraq then abrogated on 16 September 1980. Iraqi advances into Iran began on 22 September along a front of 500 km (300 miles). Fierce Iranian resistance brought about a stalemate, which lasted until the spring of 1982, when Iranian counter-offensives led to the retaking of the port of Khorramshahr in May and the withdrawal of Iraqi troops from the territory which they had taken in 1980. In July 1982 the Iranian army crossed into Iraq.

The Gulf War, as it is known, has since degenerated into a conflict of attrition, with neither side apparently able to stage a decisive offensive. While Iran launched a series of attacks across its northern border with Iraq in October 1983, threatening the last outlet for Iraqi exports of petroleum through the Kirkuk pipeline, Iraq intensified missile attacks and bombing raids against Iranian towns and petroleum installations. During the autumn of 1983 Iraq took delivery of five French-built Super Etendard fighter aircraft. With these and with the Exocet missiles which it already possessed, Iraq has threatened to destroy Iran's oil industry, centred on Kharg Island in the Gulf. Iran, in turn, has said that it will block the Gulf at the Straits of Hormuz to all traffic (including exports of one-sixth of the West's petroleum requirements) if Iraqi military action makes it impossible to export its oil by that route.

The death toll in the war could be as high as 500,000, while damage to industry and property runs into thousands of millions of dollars. Iraq has accepted UN terms for a cease-fire but Iran insists that nothing less than the removal of the Hussain regime, the withdrawal of Iraqi troops from Iranian territory and the agreement to pay US $160,000m. in war reparations (as calculated in July 1984) can bring an end to hostilities. Further approaches to Iran in 1984 by Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Japan, among others, were met with the stubborn refusal to negotiate with Iraq while Saddam Hussain is in power there.

In February 1984 a further Iranian offensive resulted in the capture of marshlands around the southern Iraqi island of Majnoon, the site of rich petroleum deposits. Iraq failed to recapture the lost territory, and was censured internationally for its use of mustard gas in the fighting. A long hiatus ensued, during which Iran was believed to be preparing a massive offensive, involving more than 500,000 men, in the region of the southern Iraqi port of Basra. The offensive had failed to materialize by the beginning of 1985. Apart from possible internal Iranian disagreements as to the long-term conduct of the war, the fact, generally accepted in 1984, of Iraq's growing military superiority may have contributed to the delay and to Iranian fears of massive Iraqi reprisals against its oil industry if the offensive should go ahead. In 1984 the balance of military power moved in Iraq's favour, and its financial position improved as the USA and the USSR, both officially neutral in the war with Iran, provided aid. The USSR, having already sold SS-12 missiles to Iraq, increased its military aid following a rapprochement in March, precipitated by Iran's anti-Soviet stance, and is responsible for providing an estimated two-thirds of Iraq's total armaments and much of its ammunition. The USA is assisting Iraq with the financing of crucial oil export pipeline projects and an increasing allocation of commodity credits. (Iraq and the USA re-established full diplomatic relations on 26 November 1984, more than 17 years after they had been broken off by Iraq following the Arab–Israeli war of 1967). Egypt is estimated to have provided ammunition and military spare parts worth US $1,300m. since the beginning of the war, and Brazil and Chile have also sold arms to Iraq. The delivery of eight French Mirage F-1 EQ5 fighter aircraft in October 1984 brought the Iranian Levan Island oil terminal within Iraq's range and underlined its superiority in the air. An Iranian offensive would lack vital air cover, while on the ground Iraq's tank force is superior in numbers and sophistication. As the Iranians delayed, Iraq constructed a formidable defensive network along the southern front.

Although it had declared a maritime exclusion zone at the north-east end of the Persian Gulf, enclosing Kharg Island, in August 1982 and made spasmodic attacks against shipping (not only tankers but, in some cases, ships well outside the zone), Iraq refrained from attacking tankers using the Kharg Island oil terminal until May 1984. After the first series of attacks on some dozen vessels, regardless of nationality, Iran retaliated by attacking Saudi Arabian and Kuwaiti tankers in the Gulf. It was apparently Iraq's intention to extend the conflict and to bring other Gulf states into the war. Saudi Arabia and Kuwait continue to support Iraq financially, so, to Iran, their vessels were legitimate targets which it might be in Iran's interests to attack if this made them exert pressure on Iraq to discontinue raids on Iranian oil installations. A sporadic series of Iraqi attacks on Gulf tanker traffic, and on the Kharg Island terminal itself, has continued, but the success of these tactics has been limited. The attacks have not been intensive or destructive enough to starve Iran of vital oil revenues. Rates of insurance for tankers using Kharg Island have risen sharply during periods of Iraqi raids, deterring customers for Iranian oil, but have fallen equally sharply when the attacks cease for a time, encouraging the tankers, also attracted by Iran's oil price discounts, to return. Saudi Arabia (apart from an incident in which an Iranian fighter aircraft was shot down) and Kuwait have remained militarily aloof from the war. It is possible that Iraq is not willing to call Iran's bluff and, by destroying Kharg Island, risk provoking an onslaught by an Iran which has nothing left to lose. The conviction grew during 1984, however, that neither Iran nor Iraq possesses the capability to carry out its worst threats; though, if they do have such a capability, it is debatable whether they are convinced that it would be in their best interests to use it.

In spite of setbacks in the war, Saddam Hussain retained his positions as Chairman of the RCC and Regional Secretary of the Baath Party, following its regional Congress in June 1982. In fact, a subsequent purge throughout the administration left him more firmly in control than before. In August, however, the Baathist regime suffered a disappointment when Iraq had to abandon arrangements to host a summit conference of non-aligned countries in September. Kurdish rebels have also become active again in northern Iraq, occasionally supporting Iranian forces. Another threat is posed by the Supreme Council of Iraqi Opposition Groups, formed in Teheran in November 1982 by the exiled Shi'ite leader, Hojatoleslam Muhammad Baqir Hakin.

An attempted coup is believed to have taken place in Baghdad in October 1983, led by the recently dismissed head of intelligence, Barzan Takriti, the President's half-brother, and a number of senior army officers, who were later reported to have been executed.

The problem of autonomy for Iraq's 2.5m.–3m. Kurds (currently in limited operation in three provinces) has a particular significance for Saddam Hussain, as costly equipment and manpower has been repeatedly diverted from critical areas in the war with Iran to control Kurdish rebellion in the north-east of the country. Unable to fight wars on two fronts, Hussain has sought an accommodation with the Kurds. A series of talks began in December 1983 after a cease-fire had been agreed with Jellal Talibani, leader of the main Kurdish opposition party in Iraq, the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan (PUK), and of an estimated 40,000 Kurdish soldiers. The success of these talks would provide only a partial solution to the problem as they do not include the other main Kurdish group, the Democratic Party of Kurdistan (DPK), led by Idris and Masoud Barzani, which is antipathetic towards the PUK and seeks to further the cause of Kurdish autonomy by siding with Iran. Hopes for a government of national unity, including the PUK and the Communist Party of Iraq, have so far been frustrated. Hussain's conciliatory attitude appeared to change, possibly owing to the greater international support for Iraq which was forthcoming in 1984, and the talks broke down in May 1984. Unconfirmed government reports state that a dialogue has continued, with Hussain trying to persuade the PUK to join the National Progressive Front. To win its support, Hussain would have to make major concessions to the PUK, such as granting Kurdish control of Kirkuk province, where some of Iraq's main oilfields are situated, and giving the Kurds a fixed share of national oil revenues (reportedly 20%–30%), and this he is unlikely to do.

Hussain has largely managed to retain his authority. Iraq's Shi'ite community (about 55% of the total population) is evidently not attracted by Khomeini's brand of fundamentalism and has remained loyal to Iraq and its Sunni President, while the opposition of Iranian-backed terrorist groups has had no significant effect.

Government

Power rests with the President and a Revolutionary Command Council (RCC), which in January 1985 comprised nine members (including the Chairman and Vice-Chairman). Considerable influence is wielded by the Iraq Regional Command of the Baath Party, while the routine administration of the country is carried out by an appointed Council of Ministers. Legislative responsibility is shared between the RCC and the National Assembly, with 250 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years. The country is divided into 15 Provinces and three Autonomous Regions. A Kurdish autonomous area has been set up, and a 50-member Kurdish Legislative Council was elected in September 1980.

Defence

Military service is compulsory for all men at the age of 18 years, and lasts between 21 months and two years, extendable in wartime. In July 1984 the army had a total strength of 600,000; the air force had a strength of 38,000, and the navy 4,500. The navy is to be expanded. There were 75,000 army reserves. In order to wage the Gulf War, these forces are supplemented by a 650,000-strong popular army and possibly 10,000 volunteers from Arab countries. Estimated defence expenditure in 1983 was ID 3,200m. (US $10,296m.).

Economic Affairs

Petroleum is the most important sector of the economy, and by 1979 Iraq had outstripped Iran as the largest oil producer in the Middle East after Saudi Arabia. Iraq officially assessed its proven reserves of crude petroleum at 65,000m. barrels in 1984. Production rose from 2.21m. barrels per day (b/d) in 1977 to 2.6m. b/d in 1978, and to 3.45m. b/d in 1979, while revenues rose from US $9,500m. to $21,200m. over the same period. Because of the outbreak of the Gulf War and a lower world demand for oil, production in 1980 fell by 23.7% to 2.64m. b/d, but higher prices meant that government revenues from the petroleum industry rose to US $26,500m. Production in 1981 fell to 900,000 b/d, with revenues of only $10,400m. Oil exports were a record 3.2m. b/d in 1980 but, because of the Gulf War, Iraq could export only about 650,000 b/d in 1983 through the 980-km (610-mile) pipeline across Turkey, its only remaining normal outlet for oil exports, plus 50,000–60,000 b/d by road.

The severe burden which has been imposed on the economy by the war (costing an estimated US $1,000m. per month) emerged as the most critical concern for President Hussain in 1983. The Iraqi Government's revenue from oil had been slashed by almost 75% to a level (US $10,250m. in 1982) which was insufficient to cover war expenses, following the destruction of Iraq's oil terminals on the Gulf, the closure of the pipeline across hostile Syria (with a capacity of 650,000 to 700,000 b/d) in April 1982, and the decline in oil prices. The country's main port, Basra, has been closed since 1980 because of the war. The 1981–85 Five-Year Development Plan had to be suspended, and planning is now done on a yearly basis. Countries which had been eager to invest in Iraq and to bid for lucrative construction contracts even after the war with Iran had begun, when Iraq was an oil-rich country committed to an ambitious programme of development, are now faced with the problem of obtaining payment. Iraq's reserves of foreign exchange, which had been some $30,000m. at the beginning of the war in 1980, dwindled to about $800m. at the end of 1983. Imports in 1983 may have been only 50% or 60% of their 1982 value of $19,936m., while exports were worth about $10,000m., compared with more than $26,000m. in 1980. The $12,000m. trade surplus of 1980 became, by 1983, an annual deficit of between $8,000m. and $10,000m.

In spite of these problems, work on contracts worth some $25,000m. has continued. Foreign contractors were asked to finance their projects themselves in 1983 and 1984 by accepting a greater share of the payments due in local currency (which has lost value since the war), part-payment in oil, or refinancing of the foreign currency portion of outstanding payments. France, the largest supplier of armaments to Iraq after the USSR, has agreed to lend $1,000m. to help pay for large-scale French construction and infrastructure projects, though in 1983 Iraq already owed $2,400m. to France, out of an overall debt of $8,000m. or more. As part-payment of this debt, France accepted 4m. tons of oil in 1983. The Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and India are other countries with a substantial financial stake in Iraq. Saudi Arabia and Kuwait have lent some $26,000m. to Iraq since the Gulf war began, as well as $3,000m. per year in revenues from about 300,000 b/d of oil (250,000 b/d from the Neutral Zone and the remainder from Saudi Arabia), sold on Iraq's behalf.

In spite of its doubtful credit-worthiness, Iraq managed to obtain a $120m. Eurocredit in March 1983 for financing the expansion of its sole functioning oil pipeline from Kirkuk to Cayhan in Turkey. The capacity of the pipeline reached 1m. b/d in August 1984. In addition, Iraq has three new pipeline projects in train. In August 1984 it was decided to construct a new pipeline running parallel to the existing one from Kirkuk to Yumurtalik in Turkey. The pipeline will take two years to construct, at a cost of $550m., and the combined export capacity of the two lines will be about 1.55m. b/d. Owing to the introduction of this scheme, an existing plan for Iraq and Turkey to co-operate in the construction of a pipeline to carry 3m. tons of liquefied petroleum gas per year from Kirkuk to Yumurtalik may be delayed. However, a refinery to process Iraqi crude oil is to be built in Turkey. A two-stage oil pipeline project, agreed with Saudi Arabia in November 1983, should increase Iraq's export capacity by 1.6m. b/d. The first stage, of 640 km (398 miles), is to link Iraqi oilfields in the south with the Saudi Petroline, providing export capacity of 500,000 b/d by 1986. The second stage involves the laying of an independent Iraqi pipeline parallel to the Saudi line, terminating at Yanbu on the Red Sea. The third project is a joint venture with Jordan to build a pipeline 1,650 km long from western Iraq to Aqaba on Jordan's Red Sea coast. The pipeline will have a capacity of 1m. b/d and is to be built in two stages, each of 500,000 b/d, at a total cost of US $950m. Two-thirds of the cost will be borne by Jordan, with the remainder due from Iraq, being financed by oil revenues. Although Israel undertook not to attempt to sabotage the proposed pipeline, at the end of 1984 Iraq was still uncertain whether to risk such a large investment in a project so close to Israel.

The pipeline from Iraq to Banias, in Syria, is likely to remain closed for the duration of the war with Iran, from which Syria is receiving subsidized oil for blending at Banias. However, if all Iraq's pipeline projects are successfully completed, exports of oil (including some 200,000 b/d transported by road to Aqaba) could reach 4.5m. b/d, far in excess of its OPEC export quota of 1.2m. b/d. Iraq was not required to make a reduction in its output in October 1984, when OPEC cut production by 1.5m. b/d, in order to prevent a further fall in prices on the world market, which was over-supplied with oil.

The outlook for the Iraqi economy became more encouraging in 1984. The war was then estimated to be costing Iraq $20m. per day but, to set against this, there is the prospect of substantially increased revenue from oil exports as the various pipeline schemes are completed. The Government hopes to have an extra 1m. b/d of oil available for export by the end of 1985.

Even before the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with the USA in November 1984, trade between the USA and Iraq had been increasing. The value of commodity credits granted to Iraq by the US Department of Agriculture in the fiscal year 1984 was a record $633m. In fiscal 1983 Iraq actually purchased US produce worth $681.8m., although its initial allocation under the credit guarantee scheme was only about $500m. US exports to Iraq in 1983 totalled $511.7m., and are expected to exceed this figure by an estimated 15% in 1984. Iraqi exports to the USA totalled $77.7m. in the first eight months of 1984, more than the annual total in either 1982 or 1983. The Export-Import Bank of the USA has guaranteed $500m. in commercial loans to cover US supplies for the construction of the oil pipeline to Aqaba in Jordan. Meanwhile, the USSR, in line with its political support for Iraq in the Gulf War, virtually ceased purchases of oil from Iran and turned to Iraq and Saudi Arabia for its main Gulf supplies, after the signing of an accord with Iraq in April 1984 to increase co-operation in oil production. In July Iraq obtained a $2,000m. credit from the USSR for a number of development projects, including oil exploration and production, dam construction and energy use.

Government spending has fallen, largely owing to a drop in investment, and the budget deficit for fiscal 1984 is expected to be of the order of $1,500m., compared with $3,100m. in the previous year. Iraq was successful in 1984 in deferring payments for refinancing of up to $10,000m. that it owed to foreign contractors (mainly French, Indian and Japanese). Purchases of arms were running at a rate of about $400m. per month in 1984, compared with $1,000m. per month in 1982, and France and the USSR have granted generous credit terms to cover their arms sales to Iraq. In 1985, however, payments to contractors in the range of $2,000m.–$3,000m., deferred from 1983, fall due. Iraq's overall repayment obligations for 1985 could be as high as $7,000m., according to one estimate. Total external debts are estimated at $40,000m. The country has hardly any reserves, and the Government has said that it will not reduce budget spending further to help to cover its debts.

Transport and Communications

Iraq has about 2,500 km (1,550 miles) of railway track, and a further 3,000 km (1,865 miles) are planned. The main means of travel is road. New trunk roads have been built. According to the Ministry of Housing and Construction, there were 25,385 km (15,775 miles) of main roads in 1984. In many desert areas the natural surfaces are passable for vehicles. The lower reaches of the Euphrates river and the combined mouth of the Tigris and Euphrates, the Shatt al-Arab, are navigable (although affected by war since late 1980) and deep-water berths for tankers serve Iraq's oilfields. The port of Basra is closed because of the Gulf War.

Social Welfare

A limited Social Security Scheme was introduced in 1957 and extended in 1976. Benefits are given for old age, sickness, unemployment, maternity, marriage and death. Health services are free. In 1978 Iraq had 201 hospital establishments, with a total of 24,717 beds. There were 7,323 physicians working in the country in 1980.

Education

Education is free, and primary education, lasting six years, has been made compulsory in an effort to reduce illiteracy. Primary enrolment of children between six and 11 years of age reached 100% in 1978. About 49% of children aged 12 to 17 (64% of boys; 33% of girls) attended secondary schools in 1981. An anti-illiteracy campaign, costing US $22m., began in December 1978, and has been encouraged by President Hussain. There are seven teacher-training institutes and six universities.

Tourism

Iraq is the ancient Mesopotamia of early history, and one of the oldest centres of civilization. The ruins of Ur of the Chaldees, Babylon, Nineveh and other relics of the Sumerian, Babylonian, Assyrian and Persian Empires are of interest to the tourist. Hatra and Ctesiphon represent the early medieval period. There were 719,823 visitor arrivals in 1978.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 20 June* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 14 July (Republic Day, anniversary of the 1958 coup), 17 July (National Day, anniversary of the 1968 coup), 27 August* (Id ul Adha), 16 September* (Islamic New Year), 25 September* (Ashoura), 25 November* (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 6 January (Army Day), 8 February (14 Ramadan Revolution, anniversary of the 1963 coup).

Directory

The Constitution

The following are the principal features of the Provisional Constitution issued on 22 September 1968:

The Iraqi Republic is a popular democratic and sovereign state. Islam is the state religion.

The political economy of the state is founded on socialism.

The state will protect liberty of religion, freedom of speech and opinion. Public meetings are permitted under the law. All discrimination based on race, religion or language is forbidden. There shall be freedom of the Press, and the right to form societies and trade unions in conformity with the law is guaranteed.

The Iraqi people is composed of two main nationalities: Arabs and Kurds. The Constitution confirms the nationalistic rights of the Kurdish people and the legitimate rights of all other minorities within the framework of Iraqi unity.

The highest authority in the country is the Council of Command of the Revolution (or Revolutionary Command Council—RCC), which will promulgate laws until the election of a National Assembly. The Council exercises its prerogatives and powers by a two-thirds majority.

Two amendments to the Constitution were announced in November 1969. The President, already Chief of State and head of the government, also became the official Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and President of the Command Council of the Revolution. Membership of the latter body was to increase from five to a larger number at the President's discretion.

Earlier, a Presidential decree replaced the 14 local government districts by 16 governorates, each headed by a governor with wide powers. In April 1976 Tekrit (Saladin) and Kerbala became separate governorates, bringing the number of governorates to 18, although three of these are designated Autonomous Regions.

The 15-article statement which aimed to end the Kurdish war was issued on 11 March 1970. In accordance with this statement, a form of autonomy was offered to the Kurds in March 1974, but some of the Kurds rejected the offer and fresh fighting broke out.

The new Provisional Constitution was announced in July 1970. Two amendments were introduced in 1973 and 1974, the 1974 amendment stating that 'the area whose majority of population is Kurdish shall enjoy autonomy in accordance with what is defined by the Law'.

The President and Vice-President are elected by a two-thirds majority of the Council. The President, Vice-President and members of the Council will be responsible to the Council. Vice-Presidents and Ministers will be responsible to the President.

In July 1973, President Bakr announced a National Charter as a first step towards establishing the Progressive National Front. A National Assembly and People's Councils are features of the Charter. A law to set up a 250-member National Assembly and a 50-member Kurdish Legislative Council was adopted on 16 March 1980, and the two Assemblies were elected in June and September 1980 respectively.

Legislature

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

No form of National Assembly existed in Iraq between the 1958 revolution, which overthrew the monarchy, and June 1980. The existing provisional constitution contains provisions for the election of an assembly at a date to be determined by the Government. The members of the Assembly are to be elected from all political, social and economic sectors of the Iraqi people. In December 1979 the RCC invited political, trade union and popular organizations to debate a draft law for setting up a 250-member National Assembly (elected from 56 constituencies) and a 50-member Kurdish Legislative Council, both to be elected by direct, free and secret ballot. Elections for the first National Assembly took place on 20 June 1980, and for the Kurdish Legislative Council on 11 September 1980. The Assembly is dominated by members of the ruling Baath Party.

Elections for the second National Assembly were held on 20 October 1984. The total number of votes cast was 7,171,000 and Baath Party candidates won 73% (183) of the 250 seats, compared with 75% in the previous Assembly. The number of women elected rose to 33.

Chairman: Dr Sa'adoun Hammadi.

Chairman of the Kurdish Legislative Council: Ahmed Abdul Qadir al-Naqshabandi.

Courts in Iraq consist of the following: The Court of Cassation, Courts of Appeal, First Instance Courts, Peace Courts, Courts of Sessions, Shara' Courts and Penal Courts.

The Court of Cassation: This is the highest judicial bench of all the Civil Courts; it sits in Baghdad, and consists of the President and a number of vice-presidents and not fewer than 15 permanent judges, delegated judges and reporters as necessity requires. There are four bodies in the Court of Cassation, these are: (a) the General body, (b) Civil and Commercial body, (c) Personal Status body, (d) the Penal body.

Courts of Appeal: The country is divided into five Districts of Appeal: Baghdad, Mosul, Basra, Hilla, and Kirkuk, each with its Court of Appeal consisting of a president, vice-presidents and not fewer than three members, who consider the objections against the decisions issued by the First Instance Courts of first grade.

Courts of First Instance: These courts are of two kinds: Limited and Unlimited in jurisdiction.

Limited Courts deal with Civil and Commercial suits, the value of which is five hundred Dinars and less; and suits, the value of which cannot be defined, and which are subject to fixed fees. Limited Courts consider these suits in the final stage and they are subject to Cassation.

Unlimited Courts consider the Civil and Commercial suits irrespective of their value, and suits the value of which exceeds five hundred Dinars with first grade subject to appeal.

First Instance Courts consist of one judge in the centre of each Liwa, some Qadhas and Nahiyas, as the Minister of Justice judges necessary.

Revolutionary Courts: These deal with major cases that would affect the security of the state in any sphere: political, financial or economic.

Courts of Sessions: There is in every District of Appeal a Court of Sessions which consists of three judges under the presidency of the President of the Court of Appeal or one of his vice-presidents. It considers the penal suits prescribed by Penal Proceedings Law and other laws. More than one Court of Sessions may be established in one District of Appeal by notification issued by the Minister of Justice mentioning therein its headquarters, jurisdiction and the manner of its establishment.

Shara' Courts: A Shara' Court is established wherever there is a First Instance Court; the Muslim judge of the First Instance Court may be a Qadhi to the Shara' Court if a special Qadhi has not been appointed thereto. The Shara' Court considers matters of personal status and religious matters in accordance with the provisions of the law supplement to the Civil and Commercial Proceedings Law.

Penal Courts: A Penal Court of first grade is established in every First Instance Court. The judge of the First Instance Court is considered as penal judge unless a special judge is appointed thereto. More than one Penal Court may be established to consider the suits prescribed by the Penal Proceedings Law and other laws.

One or more Investigation Court may be established in the centre of each Liwa and a judge is appointed thereto. They may be established in the centres of Qadhas and Nahiyas by order of the Minister of Justice. The judge carries out the investigation in accordance with the provisions of Penal Proceedings Law and the other laws.

There is in every First Instance Court a department for the execution of judgments presided over by the Judge of First Instance if a special president is not appointed thereto. It carries out its duties in accordance with the provisions of Execution Law.

Religion

ISLAM

About 95% of the population are Muslims, more than 50% of whom are Shi'ite. The Arabs of northern Iraq, the Bedouins, the Kurds, the Turkomans and some of the inhabitants of Baghdad and Basra are mainly of the Sunni sect, the remaining Arabs south of the Diyali belong to the Shi'i sect.

CHRISTIANITY

There are Christian communities in all the principal towns of Iraq, but their principal villages lie mostly in the Mosul district. The Christians of Iraq fall into three groups: (a) the free Churches, including the Nestorian, Gregorian, and Jacobite; (b) the churches known as Uniate, since they are in union with the Roman Catholic Church including the Armenian Uniates, Jacobite Uniates, and Chaldeans; (c) mixed bodies of Protestant converts, New Chaldeans, and Orthodox Armenians.

Transport

RAILWAYS

The metre gauge line runs from Baghdad through Khanaqin and Kirkuk to Erbil. The standard gauge line covers the length of the country from Rabia on the Syrian border via Mosul to Baghdad and from Baghdad to Basra and Um-Qasr on the Arabian Gulf. A 404-km standard gauge line linking Baghdad to Hasaibah, near the Iraqi-Syrian frontier, was completed in 1983. Lines totalling about 300 km are under construction, and others, amounting to some 3,000 km, are planned. All standard gauge trains are now hauled by diesel-electric locomotives. There are plans to replace all existing narrow gauge (one metre) line with standard gauge (1,435 mm). As well as the internal service, there is a regular international service between Baghdad and Istanbul.

Iraqi Republic Railways: Baghdad Central Station Building, Damascus Sq., Baghdad; tel. 30011; telex 212272; under the supervision of State Org. for Iraqi Railways; total length of track (1981): 2,439 km, consisting of 1,906 km of standard gauge, 533 km of one-metre gauge; Pres. and Chair. SHIPPING

The Ports of Basra and Um-Qasr are usually the commercial gateway of Iraq. They are connected by various ocean routes with all parts of the world, and constitute the natural distributing centre for overseas supplies. The Iraqi State Enterprise for Maritime Transport maintains a regular service between Basra, the Gulf and north European ports. The Port of Basra is closed because of the Gulf War (between Iraq and Iran). There is also a port at Khor al-Zubair, which came into use during 1979.

At Basra there is accommodation for 12 vessels at the Maqal Wharves and accommodation for 7 vessels at the buoys. There are 1 silo berth and 2 berths for oil products at Muftia and 1 berth for fertilizer products at Abu Flus. There is room for 8 vessels at Um Qasr. There are deep-water tanker terminals at Fao and Khor al-Amaya for 4 and 3 vessels respectively.

For the inland waterways, which are now under the control of the State Organization of Iraqi Ports, there are 1,036 registered river craft, 48 motor vessels and 105 motor boats.

Atomic Energy

A French-built research reactor at Tamuz, near Baghdad, was destroyed in an Israeli air raid in June 1981. Israel claimed that the reactor was part of an Iraqi programme to construct nuclear weapons. The war with Iran has delayed a French commitment to rebuild the reactor.

In March 1984 it was reported that the Soviet Union had agreed to build a nuclear power station in Iraq.

ISRAEL

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The State of Israel lies in western Asia, occupying a narrow strip of territory on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean Sea. The country also has a narrow outlet to the Red Sea at the northern tip of the Gulf of Aqaba. All of Israel's land frontiers are with Arab countries, the longest being with Egypt to the west and with Jordan to the east. Lebanon lies to the north, and Syria to the north-east. The climate is Mediterranean, with hot, dry summers, when the maximum temperature in Jerusalem is generally between 30°C and 35°C (86°F to 95°F), and mild, rainy winters, with a minimum temperature in Jerusalem of about 5°C (41°F). The climate is sub-tropical on the coast but more extreme in the Negev Desert, in the south, and near the shores of the Dead Sea (a lake on the Israeli-Jordanian frontier), where the summer temperature may exceed 50°C (122°F). The official language of Israel is Hebrew, spoken by about two-thirds of the population, including most Jews. About 15% of Israeli residents, including Muslim Arabs, speak Arabic (which is also the language spoken by the inhabitants of the 'occupied areas'), while many European languages are also spoken. About 85% of the population profess adherence to Judaism, the officially recognized religion of Israel, while about 13% are Muslims. The national flag (proportions 250 by 173) has a white background, with a six-pointed blue star composed of two overlapping triangles (the 'Shield of David') between two horizontal blue stripes near the upper and lower edges. The Israeli Government has designated the city of Jerusalem (part of which is Jordanian territory annexed by Israel in 1967) as the country's capital, but this is not recognized by the United Nations, and most foreign governments maintain their embassies in Tel-Aviv.

Recent History

The Zionist movement, launched in Europe in the 19th century, aimed at the re-establishment of an autonomous community of Jews in their historic homeland of Palestine (the 'Promised Land'). The growth of Zionism was partly due to the insecurity that was felt by Jewish minorities in many European countries as a result of racial and religious hostility, known as anti-semitism, which sometimes included discrimination, persecution and even massacre.

Palestine, for long inhabited by Arabs, became a part of Turkey's Ottoman Empire in the 16th century. During the First World War (1914–18), when Turkey was allied with Germany, the Arabs under Ottoman rule rebelled. Palestine was occupied by British forces in 1917–18, when the Turks withdrew. Meanwhile, in November 1917, the British Foreign Secretary, Arthur Balfour, declared British support for the establishment of a Jewish national home in Palestine, providing that the rights of 'the existing non-Jewish communities' there were safeguarded. The Balfour Declaration, as it is known, was confirmed by the governments of other countries then at war with Turkey.

British occupation of Palestine continued after the war, when the Ottoman Empire was dissolved. In 1920 the territory was formally placed under British administration by a League of Nations mandate, which incorporated the Balfour Declaration. British rule in Palestine was hampered by the conflict between the declared obligations to the Jews and the rival claims of the indigenous Arab majority. In accordance with the mandate, Jewish settlers were admitted to Palestine (whose population in 1919 was almost entirely Arab), but only on the basis of limited annual quotas. Serious anti-Jewish rioting by Arabs occurred in 1921 and 1929. Attempts to restrict immigration led to Jewish-sponsored riots in 1933. The extreme persecution of Jews by Nazi Germany caused an increase in the flow of Jewish immigrants, both legal and illegal, but this intensified the unrest in Palestine. In 1937 a British proposal to establish separate Jewish and Arab states, while retaining a British-mandated area, was accepted by most of the Zionists but rejected by the Arabs, and by the end of that year the conflict between the two communities had developed into open warfare, which continued throughout 1938. A British offer of eventual independence for a bi-communal Palestinian state, made in 1939, led to further incidents, but the scheme was postponed because of the Second World War (1939–45). During the war the Nazis caused the deaths of an estimated 6m. Jews in central and eastern Europe, more than one-third of the world's total Jewish population. The enormity of this massacre, known to Jews as the Holocaust, greatly increased international sympathy for Jewish claims to a homeland in Palestine.

After the war, there was strong opposition by Palestinian Jews to continued British occupation. Numerous terrorist attacks were made by Jewish groups against British targets. In November 1947 the UN approved a plan for the partition of Palestine into two states, one Jewish (covering about 56% of the area) and one Arab. The plan was, however, rejected by Arab states and by the leadership of the Palestinian Arabs. Meanwhile, the conflict between the two communities in Palestine escalated into full-scale war.

On 14 May 1948 the United Kingdom terminated its Palestine mandate, and Jewish leaders immediately proclaimed the State of Israel, with David Ben-Gurion as Prime Minister. Although the new nation had no agreed frontiers, it quickly received wide international recognition. However, the neighbouring Arab states sent forces into Palestine in an attempt to crush Israel. Fighting continued until January 1949. The cease-fire agreements left Israel in control of 75% of Palestine, including West Jerusalem. The de facto territory of Israel was thus nearly one-third greater than the area which had been assigned to the Jewish state under the UN partition plan. Most of the remainder of Palestine was controlled by Jordanian forces. This area, known as the West Bank (or, to Israelis, as Judaea and Samaria), was annexed by Jordan in December 1949 and, following a referendum, fully incorporated in April 1950. No independent Arab state was established in Palestine, and the independence of Israel was not recognized by any Arab government until 1980, when Egypt and Israel established diplomatic relations.

When the mandate ended, the Jewish population of Palestine was about 650,000 (or 40% of the total), compared with 56,000 in 1920. With the establishment of Israel, the new state encouraged further Jewish immigration. The Law of Return, adopted in July 1950, established a right of immigration for all Jews. The rapid influx of Jewish settlers (2m. Jews had arrived by May 1962) enabled Israel to consolidate its specifically Jewish character. At the same time, many former Arab residents of Palestine had become refugees in neighbouring countries, mainly Jordan and Lebanon. About 400,000 Arabs had evacuated their homes prior to May 1948, and another 400,000 fled subsequently. In 1964 some exiled Palestinian Arabs formed the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), aimed at the overthrow of Israel.

In July 1956 the Egyptian Government announced the nationalization of the company which operated the Suez Canal. In response, Israel launched an attack on Egypt in October, occupying the Gaza Strip (part of Palestine under Egyptian occupation since 1949) and the Sinai Peninsula. After pressure from the UN and the USA, Israeli forces evacuated these areas in 1957, when a UN Emergency Force (UNEF) was established in Sinai. In May 1967 the United Arab Republic (Egypt) secured the withdrawal of UNEF from its territory. Egyptian forces immediately reoccupied the garrison at Sharm el-Sheikh, near the southern tip of Sinai, and closed the Straits of Tiran to Israeli shipping, effectively blockading the Israeli port of Eilat, situated at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba. In retaliation, Israel attacked Egypt and other Arab countries in June. Israeli forces quickly overcame opposition and made substantial territorial gains. The Six-Day War, as it is known, left Israel in possession of all Jerusalem, the West Bank area of Jordan, the Sinai Peninsula in Egypt, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights in Syria. East Jerusalem was almost immediately integrated into the State of Israel, while the other conquered territories were regarded as 'occupied areas'.

Ben-Gurion resigned in June 1963 and was succeeded by Levi Eshkol, formerly Minister of Finance. Three of the parties in the ruling coalition merged to form the Israel Labour Party in 1968. On the death of Eshkol in February 1969, Golda Meir, a former Minister of Foreign Affairs, was elected Prime Minister by the Labour Party executive. She continued in office following the general elections of October 1969 and December 1973. A cease-fire between Egypt and Israel was arranged in August 1970, so ending the two years of war of attrition in the Suez Canal zone, but other Arab states and Palestinian Arab guerrilla groups, mainly PLO forces, continued their hostilities. Another war between the Arab states and Israel broke out on 6 October 1973, coinciding with Yom Kippur (the Day of Atonement), the holiest day of the Jewish year. In simultaneous attacks on Israeli-held territory, Egyptian forces crossed the Suez Canal and reoccupied part of Sinai, while Syrian troops launched an equally strong offensive on the Golan Heights. After extremely bitter fighting, involving heavy losses of men and material, Israel made cease-fire agreements with Egypt and Syria on 24 October. A disengagement agreement with Syria was signed in May 1974. A further disengagement agreement between Israel and Egypt was signed in September 1975.

Internally, Gen. Itzhak Rabin had succeeded Golda Meir as Prime Minister of a Labour Alignment coalition after her resignation in June 1974. In December 1976 Rabin lost the support of the National Religious Party (NRP) and subsequently resigned, continuing in office in a caretaker capacity until May 1977, when the Labour Alignment was unexpectedly defeated in a general election. The Likud (Consolidation) bloc, led by Menachem Begin of the Herut (Freedom) Party, was able to form a government in June 1977 with the support of the NRP, Agudat Israel, Shlomzion and, later, the Democratic Movement for Change (DMC).

Little progress towards permanent peace was made until November 1977, when President Anwar Sadat of Egypt visited Israel. The move was a tacit recognition by Egypt of the State of Israel and a hopeful pointer to peace. In spite of various meetings, however, no real advance towards peace took place until September 1978, when President Jimmy Carter of the USA, President Sadat and Prime Minister Begin met at Camp David, in the USA, and drew up two agreements. The first was a 'framework for peace in the Middle East', providing for autonomy for the West Bank and the Gaza Strip after a transitional period of five years, and the second was a 'framework for the conclusion of a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel', which was subsequently signed in Washington on 26 March 1979. Relations between Israel and Egypt were strengthened, and in February 1980 the two countries exchanged ambassadors. Egypt thus became the first Arab country to grant diplomatic recognition to Israel. The phased withdrawal from Sinai went according to plan, and the final Israeli withdrawal took place in April 1982. Little progress has been made on Palestinian autonomy. The approval in July 1980 of legislation which stated explicitly that Jerusalem should be for ever the undivided capital of Israel, and Israel's formal annexation of the Golan Heights in December 1981, have contributed to a climate in which prospects for advances on this issue are slight. Other inhibiting factors have been the Israeli policy of promoting Jewish settlements on the West Bank, and a military confrontation with Syria in mid-1981 over Syrian intervention in Lebanese affairs.

In June 1982 a major crisis developed when Israeli forces launched 'Operation Peace for Galilee', advanced through Lebanon and surrounded West Beirut, where 6,000 PLO fighters had become trapped. Intensive diplomatic efforts, led by the US Special Envoy, Philip Habib, resulted in the evacuation of 14,000–15,000 PLO and Syrian fighters from Beirut to various Arab countries at the end of August 1982. With Israeli troops in effective control of Beirut, a horrific massacre took place in the Palestinian refugee camps of Sabra and Chatila in mid-September; Israel finally acknowledged a figure of 700–800 dead. Denying the charge of ultimate responsibility for the massacre, Israel nevertheless instituted its own enquiry, chaired by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Itzhak Kahan. Published in February 1983, the report of the enquiry blamed Lebanese Phalangists for the actual killing, but concluded that Israel's political and military leaders bore indirect responsibility through their negligence. Gen. Ariel Sharon was forced to resign as Minister of Defence (to be replaced by Moshe Arens) but remained in the Cabinet as Minister without Portfolio.

Lengthy talks between Israel and Lebanon, begun in December 1982, culminated in the signing on 17 May 1983 of a 12-article agreement, formulated by the US Secretary of State, George Shultz, declaring an end to hostilities and calling for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon within three months. Syria rejected the agreement, leaving some 30,000 troops and 7,000 PLO men in the north-east of Lebanon, and Israel consequently refused to withdraw from the south. In September 1983 Israel redeployed its forces south of Beirut along the Awali river. With the Lebanese adventure proving costly to Israel in lives and finance, support grew within the army and among the Israeli public for a total withdrawal. Although the Government officially refused to abrogate the 17 May agreement, making Syrian withdrawal a precondition of an Israeli retreat, a further, partial withdrawal was not ruled out.

Meanwhile, Begin's inability to withstand pressure from the Gush Emunim movement to foster Jewish settlements on the West Bank caused several resignations from his coalition. Rampant inflation, which the Government seemed unable to control, further weakened Begin's position, and in January 1981 he decided to call an early general election in June.

As the election approached, Begin's belligerent stance over the threat of Syrian missiles in Lebanon in June, and the efforts of a new Minister of Finance, Yoram Aridor, in slowing down the rise in the cost of living by increasing government subsidies, resulted in an unexpected swing in his favour; and, although the election results were close, Begin was able to present a new coalition to the Knesset in early August. This was possible only by making an agreement with the religious parties, in particular Agudat Israel, by which numerous undertakings on religious observance, affecting most aspects of everyday life, were guaranteed. Support for Begin continued unabated when Israeli forces moved into Lebanon in June 1982 but, as the fighting grew fiercer and the limited 'Peace for Galilee' idea escalated into a full-scale war, a growing opposition to his Government's policy developed.

By the summer of 1983, Israel was sliding into an economic crisis, and the involvement in Lebanon had become an expensive stalemate. The Government's prestige had been damaged by the Beirut massacres and by a capitulation to wage demands by the country's doctors, whose four-month strike for higher pay had taken medical services to the brink of collapse. Begin, already depressed by the death of his wife in November 1982, announced his resignation on 30 August 1983. Itzhak Shamir, the Minister of Foreign Affairs since 1980, was elected leader of the Likud bloc on 2 September. Begin withheld his formal resignation until 15 September, while a period of political wrangling ensued to find a viable coalition government. Although Labour was the largest single party in the Knesset, Shamir was asked to form a government on 21 September, his Likud grouping having a theoretical majority of seven seats with the support of minority religious parties. Shamir pronounced himself committed to the Israeli presence in Lebanon, to the continuation of the West Bank settlement programme and to tackling the country's economic problems.

During the second half of 1983 the monetary crisis (see Economic Affairs) emerged as the main cause of the Government's declining popularity. The lack of a single-minded approach to the crisis led to the resignation in October of the Finance Minister, Yoram Aridor, whose policies, diluted by the Cabinet, failed to prevent inflation from soaring. The more thoroughly-pursued austerity measures of Aridor's successor, Yigal Cohen-Orgad, threatened to alienate elements of Shamir's shaky coalition (particularly the Tami party), who were concerned over the effects of cuts in social services, while the measures were also causing growing labour unrest. Further uproar greeted a plan virtually to 'freeze' the West Bank settlement programme in order to save money in early 1984.

Inflation continued to rise sharply in 1984, and in January the Government narrowly survived a vote of 'no confidence' in the Knesset. Its position was further weakened by the resignation from the Cabinet (and the loss of the guaranteed vote) of the Minister without Portfolio, Mordechai Ben-Porat, one week later. Finally, in March, the Government failed by 61 votes to 58 to prevent the passage of legislative proposals, sponsored by the Labour Party, calling for the dissolution of the Knesset prior to a general election. In this vote the Tami party sided with the Opposition. The general election was set for 23 July.

The election was conducted against a background of strikes, as the state of the economy continued to deteriorate. The overall annual rate of inflation passed 400% in July, but Labour's lead over Likud in the opinion polls declined as the election approached. In the event, the election produced no conclusive result. The Labour Alignment received 34.9% of the total votes and won 44 of the 120 seats in the Knesset, while Likud, with 31.9% of the votes, won 41 seats. The balance of power lay, once again, with the smaller parties, which together won the remaining 35 seats. However, in the multi-partite talks which followed, neither Labour nor Likud was able to gain sufficient support to form a viable coalition government, and a second general election seemed likely, unless the two major political groups could agree to unite in a national government. The President, Gen. Chaim Herzog (a former Labour member of the Knesset), nominated the Labour leader, Shimon Peres, as Prime Minister-designate on 5 August, and invited him to form a 'government of national unity'. Six weeks of negotiation were required before Peres and Itzhak Shamir could agree on the composition and policy of such a government. The new Government, whose component parties accounted for 97 of the 120 Knesset seats, was formed on 13 September. It contained representatives of the two major party groupings (Labour and Likud), four religious parties (the NRP, Shas, Agudat Israel and Morasha) and the Shinui, Yahad and Ometz parties. Under the terms of the coalition agreement, Shimon Peres is to hold the premiership for the first two years and one month of the Government, while Itzhak Shamir serves as Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, after which time they will exchange their respective posts for a further period of two years and one month. Within the Cabinet of 25 Ministers, an inner Cabinet of 10 (including five members each from Labour and Likud) was formed.

The only Cabinet post not to be allocated was that of Minister of Religious Affairs, for which the NRP and Shas were vying. They agreed to leave this portfolio, and that of Interior Minister which went with it, in the hands of the Prime Minister for one month, while a solution to the problem was worked out. However, not until December was a proposal made whereby the Religious Affairs portfolio (and all religious matters previously dealt with by the Interior Ministry) was to be awarded to the NRP, and the Interior Ministry to Shas. The spiritual leaders of Shas baulked at this loss of the Interior Ministry's religious responsibilities. Rabbi Itzhak Peretz, Shas's leader and a Minister without Portfolio in the Government, resigned on 16 December, and the coalition was faced with collapse, as Likud threatened to leave the Government if Shas, its ally, were not more considerately dealt with. On 20 December, however, the NRP and Shas accepted a formula whereby the NRP controls the Ministry of Religious Affairs and 60% of the budget for the activities of the Jewish Religious Councils, while Shas (in the person of Rabbi Peretz) controls the Interior Ministry and the remaining 40% of the budget.

The withdrawal in September 1983 of Israeli forces in Lebanon to the Awali river produced a de facto partition of the country and, as the move was unco-ordinated with the Lebanese armed forces, left a military vacuum which was filled by civil war between Druzes and Christians in the Chouf Mountains. Increasing responsibility for the policing of the occupied southern area fell upon the Israeli-controlled militia, the so-called 'South Lebanon army' (SLA), led by Maj. Sa'ad Haddad, until his death in December 1983, and subsequently by Maj.-Gen. Antoine Lahad, who was appointed in March 1984. Although there were no major clashes with Syrian or PLO forces across the Awali, the Israeli Defence Forces (IDF) continued to be the target of attacks by regional Shi'a Muslim militia groups and PLO guerrilla fighters, infiltrating from the north.

In March 1984, under the influence of Syria, President Gemayel of Lebanon abrogated the 17 May (1983) agreement with Israel. The agreement was already effectively a 'dead letter' but the Israeli Government of Itzhak Shamir was committed not to withdraw the IDF while Syrian forces remained in the north of Lebanon. More than 600 Israelis had been killed in 'Operation Peace for Galilee' by the end of 1984. The financial cost of maintaining a force in Lebanon was estimated at $250m. per year, and the accumulated cost of occupation was assessed at $2,700m. in October 1984 ($3,200m. in December). In view of the parlous state of the Israeli economy, this financial burden provided a compelling reason for ending the occupation.

The government of national unity which was formed under Shimon Peres in September 1984 pledged itself to withdrawing the IDF from Lebanon, and to tackling the problems of the economy. Any withdrawal agreement with Lebanon was not to be without conditions. To ensure the security of its northern border ideally, Israel sought Syrian commitments not to redeploy its forces in areas evacuated by the IDF; to prevent the infiltration of PLO terrorists into the south of Lebanon; to grant freedom of operation to the SLA; and to allow the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) to deploy north of the SLA area up to Syrian lines in the Beka'a valley. Lebanon, for its part, demanded $10,000m. in reparations, and the unconditional withdrawal of the IDF. More realistically, Israel dropped its demand for simultaneous Syrian withdrawal, provided satisfactory military arrangements could be made, and Syria approved a series of talks, under UN auspices, between Lebanese and Israeli army representatives, to agree the terms of withdrawal. The talks began in Naqoura (Lebanon) in November and repeatedly foundered on the question of which forces should take the place of the IDF, to prevent inter-communal fighting. The Lebanese, influenced by Syria, wanted UNIFIL to police the Israel-Lebanon border (as it had been mandated to do in 1978), and the Lebanese Army to deploy north of the Litani river, between UNIFIL and the Syrians. Israel was not convinced of the competence of the Lebanese Army, and wanted UNIFIL to be deployed north of the Litani while the SLA patrolled the southern Lebanese border. In the absence of any agreement, Israel withdrew from the talks, and on 14 January 1985 the Israeli Cabinet voted to take unilateral steps towards withdrawal, arousing fears of a massacre in southern Lebanon when they departed. The Cabinet agreed a three-phase withdrawal plan whose final aim was the return of the IDF to the international border. The first phase took place in February 1985 and involved the evacuation of the IDF from the western occupied sector, around Sidon, to the Litani river area, around Nabatiyah. The UN force was asked to police the vacated area with the Lebanese Army. In the second phase, the IDF was to leave the occupied central and eastern sector, and redeploy around Hasbayyah. The third and final phase, taking the IDF behind Israel's northern border and leaving an apparatus of control inside southern Lebanon (based on the SLA, with IDF backing), was to be completed some nine months after the first. These plans notwithstanding, Israel undertook to resume negotiations with all the concerned parties in the hope of securing a mutually acceptable agreement before the evacuation was fully under way.

In 1984 Israel rejected a call by King Hussein of Jordan for a peace conference of all the concerned parties in the Middle East, including the PLO. Israel, for its part, wants Jordan to negotiate with Egypt, Israel and the USA alone. The gradual emergence of a moderate body of Arab opinion with regard to peace in the region, comprising Egypt, Jordan, Iraq and the wing of the PLO led by Yasser Arafat, will remain of academic significance until Israel is prepared to negotiate with the PLO.

In January 1985, in an attempt to improve relations with Egypt, Israel took part in the first talks for two years on the question of the sovereignty of the tiny Taba area, on the Red Sea, which Israel did not vacate when it left Sinai in 1982.

On the question of Jewish settlement of the occupied West Bank, the document establishing the government of national unity effectively allows Shimon Peres and his fellow Labour ministers in the Cabinet to obstruct plans for new settlements. In practice, however, the survival of the coalition, to enable it to contend with the country's economic problems and the withdrawal from Lebanon, is of paramount importance, and six new settlements that had been planned by the previous Likud Government are to be permitted to go ahead, out of a total of 27 to be established during the term of the Government.

In January 1985 it was revealed that, since mid-1984, Israel had been involved in airlifting 25,000 Falashas (Ethiopian Jews) from Sudan, where they had travelled from famine-stricken Ethiopia, via Europe to resettlement camps in Israel. International publicity forced the suspension of the operation, leaving 12,000–13,000 Falashas stranded in Sudan and Ethiopia.

Government

Supreme authority in Israel rests with the Knesset (Assembly), with 120 members elected by universal suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution), on the basis of proportional representation. The President, a constitutional Head of State, is elected by the Knesset for five years. Executive power lies with the Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister. The Cabinet takes office after receiving a vote of confidence in the Knesset, to which it is responsible. Ministers are usually members of the Knesset, but non-members may be appointed.

The country is divided into six administrative districts. Local authorities are elected at the same time as elections to the Knesset. There are 31 municipalities (including two Arab towns), 115 local councils (46 Arab and Druze) and 49 regional councils (one Arab) comprising representatives of 700 villages.

Defence

The Israel Defence Forces consist of a small nucleus of commissioned and non-commissioned regular officers, a contingent called up for national service, and a large reserve. Men are called up for 36 months of military service, and women for 24 months. Military service is compulsory for Jews and Druzes, but voluntary for Christians. Total armed forces numbered 141,000 (including 93,300 conscripts) in July 1984, and full mobilization to 500,000 can be quickly achieved. The armed forces are divided into an army of 104,000, a navy of 9,000 and an air force of 28,000. Defence expenditure for 1983 was an estimated 280,000m. shekels (US $4,981m.). High inflation rates and the cost of the Lebanese occupation make defence expenditure estimates highly unreliable, and thus meaningless in shekel terms.

Economic Affairs

Of the total labour force, about 6% are employed in agriculture and about 30% in industry (manufacturing, mining and construction). Continuous immigration and an economic boycott by Arab countries have obliged Israel to develop agriculture and industry on an intensive scale and to seek far afield for international trade. Citrus fruit is the main export crop and the oldest export industry. However, sales are declining in both volume and value, owing to competition (particularly from Spain), adverse weather and fluctuating exchange rates which are not adequately compensated for by government risk insurance payments against the artificially high rate of the shekel. The shekel (which replaced the Israeli pound in 1980) was being supported in 1982 and 1983 as part of a strategy to curb an inflation rate which exceeded 100% every year in 1980–83. Earnings from exports of citrus fruit declined from US $256m. in 1979 to $186m. in 1982. Agriculture is the second largest export-earner, after cut diamonds, which earn more than $1,000m. per year. Israel is second only to Belgium in processing diamonds. The value of all exports rose by 80% between 1977 and 1981 but declined in 1982 and 1983.

During 1983 a major economic crisis, which had been threatening for several months, finally arrived. Israel's gross domestic product grew in real terms, by only 1.0% in 1982, and by 1.8% in 1983. Meanwhile, exports continued a two-year decline while imports rose (the trade deficit grew by 23% during the first half of 1983); Israel's foreign debt was $24,200m. in 1983, the highest per caput in the world; the cost of servicing this debt amounted to the total amount of US aid for the 1984 fiscal year—$2,400m. (Israel is already the largest recipient of US military and economic aid); the trade deficit was $3,470m. in 1983, a 17% increase compared with 1982; the deficit on the current balance of payments exceeded $5,000m. in 1983; defence expenditure, already absorbing more than one-quarter of the country's gross national product, increased as a result of commitments in Lebanon, costing $1m. per day; the programme for establishing Jewish settlements on the occupied West Bank, and a strike of the nation's doctors (concluded expensively in July 1983), added to the economic burden. From September 1982 the Treasury had made the reduction of inflation its priority, using heavy subsidizing in an attempt to keep increases in the price of basic commodities down to 5% per month, and allowing a gradual, monthly depreciation of the shekel of no more than 5% against the US dollar. Any impact which these measures may have had on inflation was effectively dissipated by the quarterly cost-of-living increment which is received by every salaried employee as a result of the indexation of wages to inflation. At the same time, the artificially high exchange rate of the shekel was making exports unprofitable and imports more attractive.

The shekel was devalued by 7.5% in August, and Yoram Aridor, then Finance Minister, announced cuts in government spending, with the heaviest reductions intended for the defence budget, but he managed to obtain Cabinet approval for only two-thirds of the proposed $1,000m. in cuts. With a major devaluation of the shekel apparently inevitable, Israelis rushed to buy dollars, selling even their bank shares. This trend continued during the political uncertainty following Begin's resignation in September, and trading on the stock exchange was suspended for two weeks in October. The shekel was devalued by 23% in October, and food subsidies were reduced by 50%, followed by cuts in support for electricity, water and public transport. Aridor, in proposing the temporary use of the US dollar as legal tender (to undercut the system of cost-of-living increments and to give his austerity measures a chance to reduce inflation), was forced to resign. His replacement, Yigal Cohen-Orgad, made a reduction in the balance-of-payments deficit his priority, and embarked on pruning $2,000m. from current budget expenditure before the end of the year.

Labour unrest grew as inflation accelerated at the end of 1983 to 190%. A new round of price increases in January 1984, coupled with the reduction of food subsidies, meant that food prices had trebled in three months. To avert a wave of strikes, the Government approved a 46.5% cost-of-living increment for wage-earners in January, amounting to 85% of the increase in inflation during the preceding quarter. Further disputes between Cabinet ministers, as to where cuts in expenditure should be made and by how much, delayed the announcement of the 1984/85 budget. It was finally decided that some 10% (more than US $600m.) would be cut from the defence budget, though $300m. of this would be redistributed US defence aid. The total budget was to be $22,700m., while cuts in departmental appropriations amounted to $800m. In response to Cohen-Orgad's economies, the real value of wages fell by 25% in the year to March 1984. He allowed the shekel to depreciate in line with inflation, the control of which was no longer the Government's principal aim. As a result, the annual rate of inflation rose from 150% in October 1983, when Cohen-Orgad took office, to about 400% in July 1984. Valuable time was wasted during the preparations for the July general election, and the political wrangling which followed its inconclusive result, while the state of the economy continued to deteriorate.

The new Government (which included a new Minister of Finance, Itzhak Modai) immediately requested more aid from the USA, including $1,000m., unrelated to Israel's annual grant (set at $2,600m. in fiscal 1985 and comprising $1,200m. in economic and $1,400m. in military aid), to be paid at once. The US Government, in turn, refused to give extra aid until Israel reduced spending and introduced a thoroughgoing economic austerity programme to curb inflation. Such a programme required the agreement of the employers' organizations and of the Histadrut (the General Federation of Labour in Israel), and negotiations were not initially successful. The Histadrut opposed a planned 'freeze' of wages and prices, and refused to accept a reduction in the cost-of-living increment, which stood at 80% of inflation. Planned expenditure cuts of $1,000m. were whittled down to $250m. by dissenting ministers. The Government did devalue the shekel by 9% in September but the principal effect of the removal of subsidies on oil, the cutting of those on electricity and foodstuffs, and consequent price increases (30% on oil), to compensate for pre-election liberality, was that inflation rose even more sharply than before. The retail price index rose by 21.4% in September, the highest rise for any month in Israel's history until October, when the rate was 24.3% (equivalent to an annual inflation rate of 1,260%). A decision to cut subsidies on basic foods by a further 24%–95% had to be reversed in October, when a number of ministers (including Gen. Ariel Sharon, once more a full member of the Cabinet as Minister of Industry and Trade) protested that they had not been consulted.

As a prelude to the austerity programme which it hoped to agree with the Histadrut, the Government banned the import of 50 items for six months from October, and increased the compulsory deposit on all imports from 15% to 40%. The Government's economic programme was approved by employers and unions in November 1984. To last for three months, the aim of the package was to cut the standard of living by 10%–12%, and to reduce inflation to a monthly rate of 10% (still equivalent to an annual rate of 200%). Prices, wages, taxes and profits were 'frozen', while the shekel was maintained at its existing value against the US dollar. In addition, one-third was cut from the cost-of-living increment, reducing it to 55% of inflation, and it was decided to shed 14,000 jobs from the public sector (10% of its work-force). The negative effects of these measures were that unemployment, traditionally 2%–3% of the labour force, rose to almost 6%, a degree of social unrest was discernible, and special courts had to be established to enforce the 'freeze'. However, this monetary policy had an almost immediate effect. Inflation fell to 19.5% in November (equivalent to an annual rate of 486%), and to only 3.7% in December, though it rose to 5.3% in January 1985. Inflation in the year to December 1984 was 444.9%, compared with 190% in 1983.

Lengthy negotiations between government, unions and employers led to the signing of an agreement for a second economic programme, which was to come into operation for eight months when the term of its predecessor expired on 31 January 1985. In anticipation of the second package (and with a view to saving $1,000m.), subsidies on many essential goods were heavily cut. The eight-month plan aimed to allow prices of unsubsidized goods to rise by an average of 3%–5% per month, while prices of most subsidized goods would not be allowed to rise by more than 13%. Subsidies on oil, electricity and water were either to be reduced or removed altogether, so that prices would rise by between 25% and 50%. To offset these increases, wage-earners were to receive a flat-rate cash compensation and 5% monthly tax relief, but the cost-of-living increment was not to take into account increases in the price of subsidized goods.

Israel's economic condition remains serious, although a 13% increase in exports and a 4% fall in imports reduced the 1984 trade deficit to $2,500m., equal to 71% of its 1983 level. The current balance-of-payments deficit fell by $250m. to $4,800m. in 1984, and the fall would have been greater but for enormous purchases of armaments during the year. Since July 1984, Israel's reserves of foreign exchange have been well below $3,000m., the figure regarded by the Bank of Israel as the minimum acceptable working level, and less than the cost of three months of essential imports. In January 1985 foreign exchange reserves stood at $2,300m. Foreign debt was about $22,000m. in January 1985, and Israel owed $9,600m. to the USA alone. In October 1984 the USA gave permission for Israel to postpone the payment of $500m. that was due between December 1984 and March 1985 until the latter date. In September 1984 the US Congress guaranteed economic aid to Israel, of an amount no less than past Israeli payments on loans and debts to the USA, until 1989. The US Congress approved the payment of $2,600m. in aid to Israel in fiscal 1985 (ending 30 September 1985), including the payment of the entire $1,200m. economic aid portion in the first quarter of the year instead of in instalments as was usual. However, Israeli Government requests in December 1984 for additional emergency aid of $800m., to help to maintain foreign exchange reserves, met with the US condition that Israel first adopt a more severe economic austerity programme. For fiscal 1986 Israel wants US aid to rise to $4,100m. (comprising $1,900m. in economic aid and $2,200m. in military aid). President Reagan has promised to ask Congress for military aid of $1,800m. but the same condition of concerted Israeli action to solve its economic problems attaches to any increase in economic aid.

Part of the reason for Israel's two-stage austerity programme has been to clear the way for reductions in planned expenditure of some $1,000m., which, it is accepted, are required if the economic recovery is to make real progress. These cuts have been agreed in principle by the Cabinet but the Treasury and the Ministry of Defence disagree, to the extent of some $500m., on the scale of cuts in the military budget. This is a controversial question, not only from the point of view of a country which is traditionally sensitive of its security, but also because the defence industry employs about 25% of Israel's total manpower and was responsible for 16% of industrial exports in 1983. Critics of the proposed defence cuts point to their potentially damaging effect on trade, and to the increased unemployment which they might cause, as well as to the possible adverse consequences for Israel's defensive capability.

Transport and Communications

The Israel Railway Administration runs 573 km (356 miles) of main lines and 314 km (195 miles) of branch lines. Eventually, it is planned, Eilat, the port on the Gulf of Aqaba, will be served by rail. There are about 4,600 km (2,860 miles) of metalled roads. Communications with the Arab countries are severely limited, but have been restored with Egypt. In 1982 Israel had a merchant fleet of 102 vessels, with a total displacement of 2,119,000 gross tons. International air services have been operated by El Al Israel Airlines, but financial and labour difficulties grounded the airline between September 1982 and January 1983.

Social Welfare

There is a highly advanced system of social welfare. Under the National Insurance Law, the state provides retirement pensions, benefits for industrial injury and maternity, and allowances for large families. The Histadrut (General Federation of Labour), to which more than 90% of all Jewish workers in Israel belong, provides sickness benefits and medical care. The Ministry of Social Welfare provides for general assistance, relief grants, child care and other social services. In 1979 Israel had 10,200 physicians, equivalent to one for every 371 inhabitants, one of the best doctor-patient ratios in the world. In 1982 there were 145 hospitals (of which 55 were private) and 27,072 beds.

Education

Israel has European standards of literacy and educational services. Free compulsory primary education is provided for all children between five and 15 years of age. There is also secondary, vocational and agricultural education. Post-primary education is also free, and it lasts six years, of which four are compulsory. Enrolment at primary and secondary schools in 1981 was equivalent to 89% of children aged six to 17. There are six universities, one institute of technology and one graduate school of science.

Tourism

Israel's tourist attractions include biblical sites, places holy to three religions, sunny beaches and kibbutzim (collective settlements). The Government maintains 20 tourist offices abroad. In 1983 1,166,820 tourists visited Israel.

Public Holidays

The Sabbath starts at sunset on Friday and ends at nightfall on Saturday. The Jewish year 5746 begins on 16 September 1985.

1985: 26 May (Shavuot), 16 September (Rosh Hashanah, Jewish New Year), 25 September (Yom Kippur), 30 September–7 October (Succot—half-day holidays), 8 October (Simhat Torah).

1986: 25 March (Purim), 24–30 April (Passover).

(The Jewish festivals and fast days commence in the evening of the dates given.)

Islamic holidays are observed by Muslim Arabs, and Christian holidays by the Christian Arab community.

The Constitution

There is no written Constitution. In June 1950 the Knesset voted to adopt a State Constitution by evolution over an unspecified period. A number of laws, including the Law of Return (1950), the Nationality Law (1952), the State President (Tenure) Law (1952), the Education Law (1953) and the 'Yad-va-Shem' Memorial Law (1953), are considered as incorporated into the State Constitution. Other constitutional laws are: The Law and Administration Ordinance (1948), the Knesset Election Law (1951), the Law of Equal Rights for Women (1951), the Judges Act (1953), the National Service and National Insurance Acts (1953), and the Basic Law (The Knesset) (1958). The provisions of constitutional legislation that affect the main organs of government are summarized below:

THE PRESIDENT

The President is elected by the Knesset for five years.

Ten or more Knesset Members may propose a candidate for the Presidency.

Voting will be by secret ballot.

The President may not leave the country without the consent of the government.

The President may resign by submitting his resignation in writing to the Speaker.

The President may be relieved of his duties by the Knesset for misdemeanour.

The Knesset is entitled to decide by a two-thirds majority that the President is incapacitated owing to ill health to fulfil his duties permanently.

The Speaker of the Knesset will act for the President when the President leaves the country, or when he cannot perform his duties owing to ill health.

THE KNESSET

The Knesset is the parliament of the State. There are 120 members.

It is elected by general, national, direct, equal, secret and proportional elections.

Every Israeli national of 18 years or over shall have the right to vote in elections to the Knesset unless a court has deprived him of that right by virtue of any law.

Every Israeli national of 21 and over shall have the right to be elected to the Knesset unless a court has deprived him of that right by virtue of any law.

The following shall not be candidates: the President of the State; the two Chief Rabbis; a judge (shofet) in office; a judge (dayan) of a religious court; the State Comptroller; the Chief of the General Staff of the Defence Army of Israel; rabbis and ministers of other religions in office; senior State employees and senior Army officers of such ranks and in such functions as shall be determined by law.

The term of office of the Knesset shall be four years.

The elections to the Knesset shall take place on the third Tuesday of the month of Cheshven in the year in which the tenure of the outgoing Knesset ends.

Election day shall be a day of rest, but transport and other public services shall function normally.

Results of the elections shall be published within 14 days.

The Knesset shall elect from among its members a Chairman and Vice-Chairman.

The Knesset shall elect from among its members permanent committees, and may elect committees for specific matters.

The Knesset may appoint commissions of inquiry to investigate matters designated by the Knesset.

The Knesset shall hold two sessions a year; one of them shall open within four weeks after the Feast of the Tabernacles, the other within four weeks after Independence Day; the aggregate duration of the two sessions shall not be less than eight months.

The outgoing Knesset shall continue to hold office until the convening of the incoming Knesset.

The members of the Knesset shall receive a remuneration as provided by law.

THE GOVERNMENT

The government shall tender its resignation to the President immediately after his election, but shall continue with its duties until the formation of a new government. After consultation with representatives of the parties in the Knesset, the President shall charge one of the Members with the formation of a government. The government shall be composed of a Prime Minister and a number of ministers from among the Knesset Members or from outside the Knesset. After it has been chosen, the government shall appear before the Knesset and shall be considered as formed after having received a vote of confidence. Within seven days of receiving a vote of confidence, the Prime Minister and the other ministers shall swear allegiance to the State of Israel and its Laws and undertake to carry out the decisions of the Knesset.

The Jewish Agency for Israel

POB 92, 91920 Jerusalem; tel. 241222.

Organization: The governing bodies are the Assembly which determines basic policy, the Board of Governors which sets policy for the Agency between Assembly meetings and the Executive responsible for the day to day running of the Agency.

Chairman of Executive: Arye L. Dulzin.

Chairman of Board of Governors: Jerold C. Hoffberger.

Secretary-General: Harry M. Rosen.

Functions: According to the Agreement of 1971, the Jewish Agency undertakes the immigration and absorption of immigrants in Israel, including absorption in agricultural settlement and immigrant housing; social welfare and health services in connection with immigrants; education, youth care and training; neighbourhood rehabilitation through project renewal.

Budget (1984/85): US $360m.

Judicial System

The law of Israel is composed of Ottoman law, British law, Palestine law, applicable in Palestine on 14 May 1948, when the independence of the State of Israel was declared, the substance of the common law and doctrines of equity in force in England, as modified to suit local conditions, and religious law of the various recognized religious communities as regards matters of personal status, in so far as there is nothing in any of the said laws repugnant to Israeli legislation and subject to such modifications as may have resulted from the establishment of the State of Israel and its authorities, and also of the laws enacted by the Israeli legislature. The pre-1948 law is increasingly being replaced by original local legislation.

Attorney-General: Itzhak Zamir.

CIVIL COURTS

The Supreme Court is the highest judicial instance in the State. It has jurisdiction as an Appellate Court from the District Courts in all matters, both civil and criminal (sitting as a Court of Civil Appeal or as a Court of Criminal Appeal), and as a Court of First Instance (sitting as a High Court of Justice) in matters in which it considers it necessary to grant relief in the interests of justice and which are not within the jurisdiction of any other court or tribunal. This includes applications for orders in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition and certiorari, and enables the court to review the legality of acts of administrative authorities of all kinds.

President of the Supreme Court: Meir Shamgar.

Vice-President of the Supreme Court: Miriam Ben-Porat.

Chief Registrar: Judge D. Bartov (deputy president to District Court).

The District Courts: Jerusalem, Tel-Aviv, Jaffa, Haifa, Beersheba, Nazareth. They have unlimited jurisdiction as Courts of First Instance in all civil and criminal matters not within the jurisdiction of a Magistrates' Court, all matters not within the exclusive jurisdiction of any other tribunal, and matters within the concurrent jurisdiction of any other tribunal so long as such tribunal does not deal with them, and as an Appellate Court in appeals from judgments and decisions of Magistrates' Courts and judgments of Municipal Courts and various administrative tribunals.

Magistrates' Courts: There are 28 Magistrates' Courts, having criminal jurisdiction to try contraventions and misdemeanours, and civil jurisdiction to try actions concerning possession or use of immovable property, or the partition thereof whatever may be the value of the subject matter of the action, and other civil actions on a limited basis.

Labour Courts: Established in 1969. Regional Labour Courts in Jerusalem, Tel-Aviv, Haifa and Beersheba, composed of Judges and representatives of the public. A National Labour Court in Jerusalem, presided over by Judge Z. Bar-Niv. The Courts have jurisdiction over all matters arising out of the relationship between employer and employee; between parties to a collective labour agreement; matters concerning the National Insurance Law and the Labour Law and Rules.

RELIGIOUS COURTS

The Religious Courts are the Courts of the recognized religious communities. They are competent in certain defined matters of personal status concerning members of their community. Where any action of personal status involves persons of different religious communities the President of the Supreme Court will decide which Court shall have jurisdiction. Whenever a question arises as to whether or not a case is one of personal status within the exclusive jurisdiction of a Religious Court, the matter must be referred to a Special Tribunal composed of two Justices of the Supreme Court and the President of the highest court of the religious community concerned in Israel. The judgments of the Religious Courts are executed by the process and offices of the Civil Courts.

Jewish Rabbinical Courts: These Courts have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce of Jews in Israel who are Israeli citizens or residents. In all other matters of personal status they have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts with the consent of all parties concerned.

Muslim Religious Courts: These Courts have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce of Muslims who are not foreigners, or who are foreigners subject by their national law to the jurisdiction of Muslim Religious Courts in such matters. In all other matters of personal status they have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts with the consent of all parties concerned.

Christian Religious Courts: The Courts of the recognized Christian communities have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce of members of their communities who are not foreigners. In all other matters of personal status they have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts with the consent of all parties concerned. But neither these Courts nor the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage of a foreign subject.

Druze Courts: These Courts, established in 1963, have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce of Druze in Israel, who are Israeli citizens or residents, and concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts in all other matters of personal status of Druze with the consent of all parties concerned.

Religion

JUDAISM

Judaism, the religion evolved and followed by the Jews, is the faith of the great majority of the population (3,436,000, or 82% of the total, at the end of 1983). Its basis is a belief in an ethical monotheism.

There are two main Jewish communities: the Ashkenazim and the Sephardim. The former are the Jews from Eastern, Central, or Northern Europe, while the latter originate from the Balkan countries, North Africa and the Middle East.

The supreme religious authority is vested in the Chief Rabbinate, which consists of the Ashkenazi and Sephardi Chief Rabbis and the Supreme Rabbinical Council. It makes decisions on interpretation of the Jewish law, and supervises the Rabbinical Courts. There are 8 regional Rabbinical Courts, and a Rabbinical Court of Appeal presided over by the two Chief Rabbis.

According to the Rabbinical Courts Jurisdiction Law of 1953, marriage and divorce among Jews in Israel are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Rabbinical Courts. Provided that all the parties concerned agree, other matters of personal status can also be decided by the Rabbinical Courts.

There are 195 Religious Councils, which maintain religious services and supply religious needs, and about 405 religious committees with similar functions in smaller settlements. Their expenses are borne jointly by the State and the local authorities. The Religious Councils are under the administrative control of the Ministry of Religious Affairs. In all matters of religion, the Religious Councils are subject to the authority of the Chief Rabbinate. There are 365 officially appointed rabbis. The total number of synagogues is about 7,000, most of which are organized within the framework of the Union of Israel Synagogues.

Head of the Ashkenazi Community: The Chief Rabbi Avraham Shapiro.

Head of the Sephardic Community: Jerusalem; tel. 02-244785; The Chief Rabbi Mordechai Eliahu.

Two Jewish sects still loyal to their distinctive customs are:

The Karaites, a sect which recognizes only the Jewish written law and not the oral law of the Mishna and Talmud. The community of about 12,000, many of whom live in or near Ramla, has been augmented by immigration from Egypt.

The Samaritans, an ancient sect mentioned in 2 Kings xvii, 24. They recognize only the Torah. The community in Israel numbers about 500; about half of them live in Holon, where a Samaritan synagogue has been built, and the remainder, including the High Priest, live in Nablus, near Mt Gerizim, which is sacred to the Samaritans.

ISLAM

The Muslims in Israel are mainly Sunnis, and are divided among the four rites of the Sunni sect of Islam: the Shafe'i, the Hanbali, the Hanafi and the Maliki. Before June 1967 they numbered approx. 175,000; in 1971, approx. 343,900. At the end of 1983 the total Muslim population of Israel was 555,000 (including 110,000 in East Jerusalem).

Mufti of Jerusalem: POB 20002, Jerusalem; tel. 02-285994; Sheikh Saad ed-din al-Alami.

In 1983 there were also about 67,000 Druzes in Israel.

CHRISTIANITY

The total Christian population of Israel at the end of 1983 was 96,000 (including 13,000 in East Jerusalem).

The Greek Melkite Church; POB 279, Haifa; tel. 04-523114; numbers about 41,000; Haifa is the seat of the Archbishop of Acre, Haifa, Nazareth and all Galilee; Archbishop MAXIMOS SALLOUM.

The Greek Orthodox Church: Greek Orthodox Patriarchate St, Old City, POB 19632; tel. 284917; approximately 260,000 members. Patriarch of Jerusalem DIODOROS I.

The Latin (Roman Catholic) Church: POB 14152, Jerusalem; tel. 282323; approximately 10,000 native members in Israel plus about 2,000 Polish and Hungarian Catholic refugees. The Latin Patriarch of Jerusalem is His Beatitude JAMES JOSEPH BELTRITTI; Representative in Israel HE Bishop HANNA KALDANY.

The Maronite Community, with 6,350 members, has communal centres in Isfyia, Haifa, Jaffa, Jish, Nazareth and Jerusalem. The Maronite Patriarch, Mgr JOSEPH KHOURY, resides in Lebanon. The Vicar-General, Mgr AUGUSTIN HARFOUCHE, is resident in Jaffa.

Episcopal Church in Jerusalem and the Middle East, belongs to the Anglican Communion; was reorganized in 1976; has Jerusalem Diocese and also Diocese of Iran, Egypt, Cyprus and the Gulf; Presiding Bishop Rt Rev. HASSAN DEHQANI-TAFTI, POB 12, Isfahan, Iran (in exile in Winchester diocese, England).

OTHER CHURCHES

Other denominations include the Armenian Church (900 members), the Coptic Church (700 members), the Russian Orthodox Church, which maintains an Ecclesiastical Mission, the Ethiopian Church, and the Baptist Lutheran and Presbyterian Churches.

The Press

Tel-Aviv is the main publishing centre, only three dailies being published in Jerusalem. Largely for economic reasons there has developed no local press away from these cities; hence all papers regard themselves as national. Friday editions, Sabbath eve, are increased to up to twice the normal size by special weekend supplements, and experience a considerable rise in circulation. No newspapers appear on Saturday.

Most of the daily papers are in Hebrew, and others appear in Arabic, English, French, Polish, Yiddish, Hungarian and German. The total daily circulation is 500,000–600,000 copies, or 21 papers per hundred people, although most citizens read more than one daily paper.

Most Hebrew morning dailies have strong political or religious affiliations. Al Hamishmar is affiliated to Mapam, Hatzofeh to the National Religious Front—World Mizrahi. Davar is the long-established organ of the Histadrut. Mapai publishes the weekly Ot. Most newspapers depend on subsidies from political parties, religious organizations or public funds. The limiting effect on freedom of commentary entailed by this party press system has provoked repeated criticism.

The Jerusalem Arabic daily Al-Anba has a small circulation (10,000) but an increasing number of Israeli Arabs are now reading Hebrew dailies. The daily, Al Quds, was founded in 1968 for Arabs in Jerusalem and the West Bank; the small indigenous press of occupied Jordan has largely ceased publication or transferred operations to Amman.

There are around 400 other newspapers and magazines including some 50 weekly and 150 fortnightly; over 250 of them are in Hebrew, the remainder in eleven other languages.

The most influential and respected dailies, for both quality of news coverage and commentary, are Ha'aretz and the trade union paper, Davar, which frequently has articles by government figures. These are the widest read of the morning papers, exceeded only by the popular afternoon press, Ma'ariv and Yedioth Aharonoth. The Jerusalem Post gives detailed and sound news coverage in English.

The Israeli Press Council, established in 1963, deals with matters of common interest to the Press such as drafting the code of professional ethics which is binding on all journalists.

The Daily Newspaper Publishers' Association represents publishers in negotiations with official and public bodies, negotiates contracts with employees and purchases and distributes newsprint, of which Israel now manufactures 75% of her needs.

The Histadrut

Hahistadrut Haklalit shel Haovdim Beeretz Israel (General Federation of Labour in Israel): 93 Arlosoroff St, Tel-Aviv 62098.

The General Federation of Labour in Israel, usually known as the Histadrut, is the largest voluntary organization in Israel, and the most important economic body in the state. It is open to all workers, including members of co-operatives and of the liberal professions, who join directly as individuals. The Histadrut engages in four main fields of activity: trade union organization; economic development; social insurance based on mutual aid; and educational and cultural activities. Dues—3.9% of wages—cover all its trade union, health and social services activities. The Histadrut was founded in 1920.

Secretary-General: ISRAEL KAISSAR.

ORGANIZATION

In 1983 the Histadrut had a membership of 1,600,000, including over 160,000 in collective, co-operative and private villages (kibbutzim and moshavim) affiliated through the Agricultural Workers' Union, and 360,000 wives (who have membership status); 170,000 of the members were Arabs. In addition some 110,000 young people under 18 years of age belong to the Organization of Working and Student Youth, a direct affiliate of the Histadrut. The main religious labour organizations, Histadrut Hapoel Hamizrahi and Histadrut Poalei Agudat Israel, belong to the trade union section and welfare services, which thus extend to 85% of all workers in Israel.

All members take part in elections to the Histadrut Convention (Veida), which elects the General Council (Moetsa) and the Executive Committee (Vaad Hapoel). The latter elects the 43-member Executive Bureau (Vaada Merakezet), which is responsible for day-to-day implementation of policy. The Executive Committee also elects the Secretary-General, who acts as its chairman as well as head of the organization as a whole and chairman of the Executive Bureau. Nearly all political parties are represented on the Histadrut Executive Committee. Throughout Israel there are 72 local Labour Councils.

The Executive Committee has the following departments: Trade Union, Integration of Arab Members, Mutual Security Centre, Organization, International, Finance, Legal, Employment, Vocational Training, Absorption and Development, Academic Workers, Culture and Education, Institute of Economic and Social Research, Diaspora Communities, Youth and Sport, Consumers' Authority, Industrial Democracy, Religious Affairs and Higher Education.

TRADE UNION ACTIVITIES

Collective agreements with employers fix wage scales, which are linked with the retail price index; provide for social benefits, including paid sick leave and employers' contributions to sick and pension and provident funds; and regulate dismissals. Dismissal compensation is regulated by law. The Histadrut actively promotes productivity through labour management boards and the National Productivity Institute, and supports incentive pay schemes.

There are unions for the following groups: clerical workers, building workers, teachers, engineers, agricultural workers, technicians, textile workers, printing workers, diamond workers, metal workers, food and bakery workers, wood workers, government employees, seamen, nurses, civilian employees of the armed forces, actors, musicians and variety artists, social workers, watchmen, cinema technicians, institutional and school staffs, pharmacy employees, medical laboratory workers, X-ray technicians, physiotherapists, social scientists, microbiologists, psychologists, salaried lawyers, pharmacists, physicians, occupational therapists, truck and taxi drivers, hotel and restaurant workers, workers in Histadrut-owned industry, garment, shoe and leather workers, plastic and rubber workers, editors of periodicals, painters and sculptors and industrial workers.

ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES AND SOCIAL SERVICES

These include Hevrat Ovdim (Economic Sector, employing 260,000 workers in 1983), Kupat Holim (the Sick Fund, covering almost 77% of Israel's population), seven pension funds, and NA'AMAT (women's organization which runs nursery homes and kindergartens, organizes vocational education and promotes legislation for the protection and benefit of working women).

THE IVORY COAST

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of the Ivory Coast lies on the west coast of Africa, between Ghana to the east and Liberia to the west, with Guinea, Mali and Burkina Faso to the north. The climate is hot and wet, with temperatures varying from 14°C to 39°C (57°F to 103°F). The official language is French, and a large number of African languages are also spoken. Most of the inhabitants follow traditional beliefs, while about 12% are Christians, mainly Roman Catholics, and 23% Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three equal vertical stripes, of orange, white and green. The capital is Abidjan. The process of transferring the capital to Yamoussoukro (the President's birthplace), about 220 km (135 miles) north-west of Abidjan, was begun in March 1983.

Recent History

Formerly a province of French West Africa, the Ivory Coast achieved self-government, within the French Community, in December 1958. Félix Houphouët-Boigny, leader of the Parti démocratique de la Côte d'Ivoire (PDCI), became Prime Minister in 1959. The country became fully independent on 7 August 1960.

A new constitution was adopted in October 1960, and Houphouët-Boigny became President in November. The ruling PDCI has been the country's only organized political party since it was founded in 1946. The Ivory Coast has retained close links with France, and the country's foreign policy is generally pro-Western. A high rate of economic growth and strong support from the French have contributed to the stability of the regime. Political unrest has occurred sporadically, though without strong leadership. Two plots were uncovered in 1963, apparently representing a youthful radical element and northerners who resented southern domination in the Government. The army was reduced in size to reduce the risk of military intervention. The Government responded to criticism by implementing a policy of regional development and increased Ivorian management of commercial enterprises.

In 1977 Houphouët-Boigny replaced the Ministers of Finance, Economic Planning and Foreign Affairs, and legislation was enacted against corrupt trading and speculation in commodities. In May 1978 a significant step towards the relaxation of the PDCI's political dominance was taken when it was decided that, with the exception of Abidjan and Bouaké, the capitals of all the Departments would be administered by elected mayors, rather than by party appointees. In October 1980 President Houphouët-Boigny was re-elected unopposed for a fifth five-year term of office. Elections to the National Assembly were held in November and, for the first time, more than one candidate was permitted to contest each seat. In December 1980 the President escaped unhurt when a petrol bomb was thrown at his car during independence anniversary celebrations.

A series of strikes and demonstrations took place in the period from late 1980 to mid-1983, mainly involving students and professional groups. The longest strike, lasting from mid-April to early May of 1983, was staged by teachers protesting against the withdrawal of free housing rights, and was supported by members of the medical profession. The strike was terminated by a presidential decree ordering a return to work, and two education ministers were subsequently dismissed from the Government. President Houphouët-Boigny ordered a public investigation into allegations of malpractice in the state housing sector; as a result, several former government officials were charged with corruption in 1984.

A government reshuffle in November 1983 reduced the number of ministers from 35 to 28, in an attempt to cut administrative costs in line with the Government's current policy of austerity. Anonymous tracts critical of the PDCI, which were circulating in 1984, were vigorously denounced by the Government. Presidential, municipal and legislative elections were due to be held in 1985, and the post of Vice-President was expected to be filled.

The presence in the Ivory Coast of large numbers of Europeans and Levantines has led to sporadic clashes between Ivorians and immigrant groups. In 1981 more than 1m. foreigners were resident in the country; the Ivory Coast's French community, numbering some 40,000, is the largest in Africa. Increasing unemployment among university leavers, a concern for 'Ivorianization' and the need for reductions in public spending, however, led to the Government's decision to reduce the level of foreign assistance in the country; in 1984 it was announced that 1,500 foreign experts and technical assistants, employed mainly in state enterprises, were to leave by 1986.

Houphouët-Boigny is committed to a policy of dialogue between Black Africa and white-ruled South Africa, for which he has been strongly criticized by other African leaders. He is also outspokenly anti-communist and has denounced Soviet intervention in African affairs. President Houphouët-Boigny spent nearly five months abroad during 1983, paying official visits to the USA, Canada, France and the United Kingdom.

Government

Executive power is vested in the President, who is elected for a five-year term by direct universal suffrage. The Council of Ministers is appointed by, and directly responsible to, the President. In 1980 provision was made for the appointment of a Vice-President. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral National Assembly, with 147 members directly elected (using two ballots if necessary) for five years. The ruling Parti démocratique de la Côte d'Ivoire is the only political party. The country is divided into 26 Departments, each with its own elected Council.

Defence

Defence matters are the concern of the Regional Defence Council of the Conseil de l'Entente, through which agreements with France have been negotiated. France supplies equipment and training, and maintains a force of 480 men. In July 1984 the Ivory Coast had 4,500 men in the army, 800 in the air force and 700 in the navy. Estimated defence expenditure in 1982 was US $92.5m.

Economic Affairs

For most of its first 20 years of independence, the Ivory Coast achieved rapid economic growth, led by expansion in the agricultural sector, particularly the cultivation of plantation crops for export. In 1982, according to estimates by the World Bank, the country's GNP per head was US $950 (at average 1980–82 prices), the third highest level (after Gabon and the Congo) in Black Africa. It was estimated that GNP per head increased by 2.1% annually, in real terms, between 1960 and 1982. In the 1970–80 decade alone, however, the average annual increase was 1.5%.

Since independence, the Ivory Coast has successfully developed its economy from a largely agricultural base, and 79% of the labour force still work in the agricultural sector. From 1960 to 1970 GDP grew at an average annual rate of 8%. Between 1970 and 1981, despite the effects of the Sahelian drought, increased petroleum prices and world recession, annual growth averaged 6.2%. In 1979, however, the rate fell below 2%, and in 1980 below 1%, largely as a result of lower world market prices for the three main exports (cocoa, coffee and timber). Real GDP subsequently declined, by 2.9% in 1982, by 4.1% in 1983, and by 3.6% in 1984, although a resumption of GDP growth in 1985 was forecast. Several development projects have been postponed, and widespread reforms of state corporations implemented, in an effort to curb expenditure.

In the 1977/78 season the Ivory Coast overtook Ghana as the world's largest producer of cocoa beans. The 1978/79 cocoa crop was smaller than in previous years, but world market prices were so low that the Ivory Coast suspended exports, and began to stockpile the crop. This policy failed, however, as some stocks had to be sold at a loss. The cocoa crop reached a record 456,000 metric tons in 1981/82, but dropped to 355,000 tons the following year, after drought and bush fires caused extensive damage to plantations. Production recovered to 405,000 tons in 1983/84, and was forecast to rise to 480,000 tons in 1984/85, almost reaching the Government's annual production target of 500,000 tons. In most years since 1975, the Ivory Coast has been the world's third largest producer of coffee (behind Brazil and Colombia). Production of green coffee reached a record 367,000 tons in 1980/81, but fell to 245,000 tons in the 1981/82 season. The 1983/84 crop, seriously affected by drought, totalled only 80,000 tons. Forecasts for 1984/85 showed a good recovery.

Exports of cocoa, coffee and timber accounted for 74% of total export earnings in 1980, but crop diversification has been increasingly encouraged. The Ivory Coast is now one of the world's largest producers of palm oil and palm-kernel oil, with an estimated output of 190,000 metric tons in 1981. Production of seed (unginned) cotton was 135,800 tons in 1983/84. Rice production fell slightly from 292,400 tons in 1981/82 to 278,000 tons in the following year, and in 1984 the Government imposed restrictions on rice imports in an attempt to encourage farmers to increase production. The Government aims to achieve self-sufficiency in rice by 1987. An ambitious sugar development plan was launched in the 1970s, with the aim of developing sugar as a major export commodity. However, unsuitable climatic conditions and the slump in world sugar prices led to severe financial losses, and in 1984 the Government was forced to close two of the country's six sugar complexes. The rubber industry has shown considerable success, however, and annual production is expected to rise to 80,000 tons by 1990. Some 30,000 tons of natural rubber were produced in 1983, and plantations are being increased. Timber resources have been severely depleted in recent years: since 1960 the country has lost around 70% of its forest reserves. An extensive reafforestation programme was announced in 1984, at an estimated cost of 22,900m. francs CFA.

In 1977 the first significant petroleum deposits were discovered off the coast. The Belier field, 15 km south of Grand Bassam, began production in 1980, and was yielding an estimated 20,000 b/d by late 1982. In early 1980 the Espoir field was discovered offshore, with reserves estimated at 500m. tons, and the Ivory Coast was expected to be self-sufficient in petroleum by 1983, and a net exporter of at least 300,000 b/d after 1985. However, offshore oil production has increased much more slowly than planned and reached only 1.1m. tons in 1983, compared with the budget forecast of 1.5m. tons. Output was expected to rise considerably in 1984, with the coming 'on stream' of two new wells at the Espoir field. Reserves of offshore gas are estimated at 50,000m. cu m. However, the reserves have not yet been exploited, owing to the high cost of initial investment. There are large quantities of high-quality iron ore at Bangolo. Reserves of copper, nickel, molybdenum, cobalt, bauxite and uranium have also been discovered. Small-scale diamond mining is carried out by private companies.

The share of agriculture in GDP declined from 43% in 1960 to 28.1% in 1982, but manufacturing increased its share from 8% in 1960 to 23% in 1980. Industrial development has been based on the processing of primary commodities before export. Most exported palm oil is now refined, and large quantities of fruit (particularly pineapple) are tinned or preserved. Industrial output dropped sharply in 1983, as the prolonged drought caused widespread power cuts. Four of the Ivory Coast's five hydroelectric plants, which provide 92% of the country's electricity, were brought to a halt as a result of the drought. The Soubre hydroelectric project was indefinitely postponed in 1984, owing to the economic recession and doubts about increased dependence on hydroelectric power. The 1981–85 development plan aimed at a large increase in food production and also provided for cultural and social development. In 1984 the Government announced a new investment code, including measures to encourage decentralization and the creation of small and medium-sized enterprises.

Since 1977 the economy has suffered as commodity prices have weakened, initially for coffee and, in 1980, for cocoa, while import prices, especially for petroleum, increased. As a result of heavy borrowing in the boom years, debt servicing has become a problem, with the debt service ratio increasing from 10.6% of the country's exports of goods and services in 1977 to 40% in 1983. Total external public debt was estimated at 2,700,000m. francs CFA at the end of 1983, with debt service payments due in 1984 totalling 427,300m. francs CFA. In May 1984 agreement was reached with the 'Paris Club' of creditor countries to reschedule all repayments of debt principal and one-half of the interest repayments that were due in 1984. The agreement followed IMF approval of a one-year stand-by agreement worth SDR 82.75m., in support of the Government's economic austerity measures. Under the 1985 budget proposals, public investment was to be reduced by two-thirds, and new taxation measures introduced, in an effort to limit external financing.

Transport and Communications

A narrow-gauge railway links Abidjan with Ouagadougou, in Burkina Faso. The Ivory Coast has an extensive road system, covering 46,580 km (28,943 miles), including more than 7,000 km (4,350 miles) of surfaced roads, in 1982. The lower courses of the rivers and the coastal lagoons are used for local transport. The chief ports are Abidjan and San Pedro. Work on the extension of Abidjan port began in 1980. The headquarters of Air Afrique, in which the Ivory Coast has a share, are in Abidjan. Domestic services are provided by Air Ivoire.

Social Welfare

Medical services are organized by the State. In 1980 the country had 8,799 hospital beds and 518 physicians. There is a minimum wage for workers in industry and commerce. Projects to increase the social and health services to regional centres and villages are being carried out.

Education

In 1980, according to UNESCO estimates, adult illiteracy averaged 65% (males 55%; females 76%). Education at all levels is free, and attendance at primary school is officially compulsory. Enrolment at primary schools in 1979 was equivalent to 76% of all children between six and 11 years of age (92% of boys; 60% of girls). In the towns, however, average attendance is more than 90%. Secondary enrolment in 1979 was 17% of children aged 12 to 18 (25% of boys; 9% of girls). The National University has five faculties, and in 1980 had more than 17,000 students. Also, many students attend French universities. In 1981–85 five technical training institutes were to be built, and the University was to be decentralized.

Tourism

The game reserves, forests, lagoons, rich tribal folklore and the sophisticated city of Abidjan are all of interest to tourists. There were an estimated 20,000 visitors in 1981. The 10-km coastal strip along the Lagune Ebrié, to the west of Abidjan, is being developed as a tourist riviera. In 1983 there were 7,000 hotel rooms in the Ivory Coast.

Directory

The Constitution

The Constitution was promulgated on 31 October 1960. It was amended in June 1971, October 1975 and November 1980.

PREAMBLE

The Republic of the Ivory Coast is one and indivisible. It is secular, democratic and social. Sovereignty belongs to the people who exercise it through their representatives or through referenda. There is universal, equal and secret suffrage. French is the official language.

HEAD OF STATE

The President is elected for a five-year term by direct universal suffrage and is eligible for re-election. He is Head of the Administration and the Armed Forces and has power to ask the National Assembly to reconsider a Bill, which must then be passed by two-thirds of the members of the Assembly; he may also have a Bill submitted to a referendum. In case of the death or incapacitation of the President his functions are carried out by an elected Vice-President.

EXECUTIVE POWER

Executive power is vested in the President. He appoints a Council of Ministers, who are responsible only to him. Any member of the National Assembly appointed minister must renounce his seat in the Assembly, but may regain it on leaving the Government.

LEGISLATIVE POWER

Legislative power is vested in a National Assembly of 147 members, elected for a five-year term of office. Legislation may be introduced either by the President or by a member of the National Assembly.

JUDICIAL POWER

The independence of the judiciary is guaranteed by the President, assisted by a High Council of Judiciary.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

An advisory commission of 60 members appointed by the President because of their specialist knowledge or experience.

JAMAICA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Jamaica is the third largest island in the Caribbean Sea, lying 145 km (90 miles) to the south of Cuba and 160 km (100 miles) to the south-west of Haiti. The climate varies with altitude, being tropical at sea-level and temperate in the mountain areas. The average annual temperature is 27°C (80°F) and mean annual rainfall is 198 cm (78 inches). The official language is English, although a local patois is widely spoken. The majority of the population belong to Christian churches, of which the Anglican Communion is the strongest. There is also a large community of Rastafarians. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) consists of a diagonal gold cross on a background of black (left and right) and green (above and below). The capital is Kingston.

Recent History

A British colony since 1655, the island consisted mainly of large plantations, worked by African slaves, with absentee landlords. Wars and unrest in the 18th century ended with the abolition of slavery in 1834 and the declaration of complete freedom for slaves in 1838. Business flourished and the island became prosperous. An earthquake in 1907, crop disease, and the slump of the 1930s led to a period of economic instability which culminated in riots in 1938, the beginnings of rival political parties and a great increase in trade union activity. Plans for independence were made in the 1940s. Internal self-government was achieved in 1959 and full independence, within the Commonwealth, on 6 August 1962. In 1958 Jamaica joined with Trinidad, Barbados, the Leeward Islands and the Windward Islands to form the West Indies Federation. Jamaica seceded in 1961, following a referendum, and the Federation broke up.

The two dominant political figures after the Second World War were the late Sir Alexander Bustamante, leader of the Jamaica Labour Party (JLP), who retired as Prime Minister in 1967, and Norman Manley, a former Premier and leader of the People's National Party (PNP), who died in 1969. The JLP won the elections of 1962 and 1967 but, under the premiership of Hugh Shearer, it lost the elections of February 1972 to the PNP, led by Michael Manley, the son of Norman Manley. Michael Manley was an advocate of democratic socialism and his government put great emphasis on social reform and economic independence.

The early 1970s were marked by escalating street violence and crime, with gang warfare rife in the slum areas of Kingston. Between January and June 1976 162 people were killed, and in June the Government declared a state of public emergency. Despite the unrest, high unemployment and severe economic stagnation, the PNP was returned to power in December 1976 with an increased majority. The state of emergency was lifted in June 1977. By January 1979, however, there was again widespread political unrest, and violent demonstrations signalled growing discontent with the Manley Government.

In February 1980, with a worsening economic crisis, Manley rejected the IMF's conditions for further loans to Jamaica and called a general election to seek support for his economic policies and his decision to end dependence on the IMF. The electoral campaign was one of the most violent in Jamaica's history, although the level of violence dropped after a joint plea by Manley and Edward Seaga, leader of the opposition JLP, to their supporters for an end to the bloodshed. In the October election, in contrast to the close result predicted, the JLP had a decisive victory, receiving about 57% of the total votes and winning 51 of the 60 seats in the House of Representatives. Seaga was thus given a convincing mandate to implement his policies for a return to close political and economic links with the USA and the promotion of free enterprise. Diplomatic relations with Cuba were severed in October 1981, and Jamaica was seen to be moving nearer to the USA, with whose financial support the Seaga administration was giving a credible economic performance. The PNP, wishing to regain support, dissociated itself from the communist Workers' Party of Jamaica (WPJ) in an attempt to win back its more moderate voters. Electoral reforms were also called for, and a new electoral roll was to be completed before the next general election, due in 1985.

In November 1983, when only 70% of this work was complete, the JLP called an early election, to be held on 15 December. Only four days were allowed for the nomination of candidates. The PNP, unable to put up candidates at such short notice, refused to take part and declared the elections void. The JLP, opposed by minor independent candidates in only six constituencies, won all 60 seats in the House of Representatives and formed a one-party legislature. The PNP claimed that the JLP had broken an agreement not to use the old electoral lists, which, they stated, were inaccurate and disenfranchised many voters. Manley announced that the PNP would undertake extraparliamentary opposition to the JLP Government. At the inauguration of the new Parliament in January 1984, there were violent demonstrations by about 7,000 PNP supporters, led by Michael Manley.

Devaluations of the Jamaican dollar, and the withdrawal of food subsidies, provoked demonstrations and sporadic violence as the prices of foodstuffs and energy increased by between 50% and 100%. In order to offset the effects of economic austerity measures, imposed at the instigation of the IMF, the Government extended its programme of food stamps to cover more than one-half of the population. Unemployment, and the consequences of illicit trading in drugs, contributed to a rise in the incidence of crime and violence, especially in Kingston. The Government increased its powers to combat political and violent crime, although the measures were criticized as autocratic by the PNP. The PNP warned of social instability as a result of Seaga's economic policies, and argued for the need to hold fresh elections after the completion of the new electoral roll, while opinion polls highlighted the unpopularity of the Seaga administration. In January 1985 violent demonstrations erupted again in Kingston after a further rise in the price of petrol.

In October 1983 Jamaica contributed troops to the US-led invasion of Grenada and led the Caribbean force which remained, after the removal of the majority of the American forces, to keep the peace and to assist in training the new Grenadian police force. The remaining contingent was to be withdrawn in June 5.

Government

The Head of State is the British monarch, who is represented locally by a Governor-General, appointed on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. The Governor-General acts, in almost all matters, on the advice of the Cabinet.

Legislative power is vested in the bicameral Parliament: a Senate, with 21 appointed members, and a House of Representatives, with 60 elected members. Thirteen members of the Senate are appointed by the Governor-General on the advice of the Prime Minister and eight on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition. Members of the House are elected by universal adult suffrage for five years (subject to dissolution). Executive power lies with the Cabinet. The Governor-General appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament.

Defence

In July 1984 Jamaica had a total defence force of 9,720 men, including a paramilitary force of 6,000, an army of 3,500, a navy of 140 and an air force of 80 men. Defence expenditure in 1982 was estimated to be US $35m.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based mainly on sugar, bauxite and tourism. In 1982, according to estimates by the World Bank, Jamaica's gross national product (GNP) per head, measured at average 1980–82 prices, was US $1,330. In the period 1960–82 GNP per head was estimated to have grown, in real terms, by an average of 0.7% per year.

The traditional major crops of the agricultural sector are sugar cane, bananas, coffee and cocoa. A wide range of citrus and tropical fruits and vegetables are also grown. Agriculture suffered from neglect during the 1970s, but since 1980 the Government has encouraged its development with the help of foreign investors from Israel, Japan, the USA and other countries, by cultivating under-used land, by improving techniques and by growing a vast range of products, both for internal consumption and for export. Sugar production has been affected by the low international prices and by poor crops. Production of raw sugar fell from 290,000 metric tons in 1978 to 197,000 in 1982, and in 1984 the crop yielded only 190,000 tons. The industry's maximum annual capacity is 400,000 tons. The Government has closed three state-run sugar factories, and contracted private companies to run five of the remaining six, in an attempt to improve output. The banana plantations were damaged by Hurricane Allen in 1980, and Jamaica's annual exports fell from the usual level of 70,000 tons to 19,000 tons in 1981, rising to 23,000 tons in 1982. Other crops have fared better. Cocoa production in 1983 reached 2,782 tons, the highest yield for 20 years. Coffee is being developed with aid from Japan, the principal market for Jamaica's Blue Mountain coffee. In 1983 3,231 tons were produced. Local rice production is being increased in order to reduce Jamaica's imports (up to 53,000 tons per year) by more than half.

Jamaica is one of the world's largest producers of bauxite and alumina, and production levies make the industry an important source of government revenue. In 1974 the PNP Government imposed a levy of 7.5% on production, which became a major grievance with the mining companies. Exports of bauxite and alumina contribute, in normal years, 75% of total foreign exchange earnings. However, the slump in the international aluminium market has led to reduced demand and the industry provided earnings of only US $552m. in 1983, a 19.3% reduction on 1982. Total bauxite production fell substantially, from 12m. tons in 1980 to 8.3m. in 1982 and to an estimated 7.7m. in 1983. In 1984 output rose by 11.5% to reach 8.57m. tons, owing to purchases by the USA and USSR for their respective strategic mineral stockpiles. Production of alumina fell to 1.69m. tons in 1984, and a number of the country's refineries remained closed or operating below full capacity. In March Reynolds Metals announced its intention to cease mining operations in Jamaica because of the poor international market for bauxite. In May the government production levy was finally fixed at 6%.

Tourism is a major earner of foreign exchange. An influx of tourists in 1978 was followed by a record figure in 1979, but in 1980 the industry was again suffering the effects of political unrest in the capital. By 1981 it was showing some recovery, and in 1982, owing partly to a US $12m. foreign advertising campaign, arrivals soared by 60% to 650,000. Tourist arrivals increased by a further 21% in 1983, and also rose during 1984.

Manufacturing is an expanding sector, and includes cement, textiles, tobacco and a number of consumer goods. 'Free zones' were set up at Kingston and Montego Bay, and a wide range of manufacturing and assembly industries were encouraged by the Government. Although 250 new companies have started production since 1980, average investment is small, and the promised benefits of the US Government's Caribbean Basin Initiative (CBI) have proved disappointing. Trade is chiefly with the USA, Canada and the United Kingdom. A joint consortium of US and Italian companies failed to find commercially exploitable offshore deposits of petroleum to ease Jamaica's high import bill for petroleum. Further explorations offshore were to continue, financed by Canada.

The cultivation of hemp (marijuana), and the use of Jamaica as a transit centre for the movement of illegal drugs, has posed a serious problem for the Government. It has been estimated that marijuana worth US $750m. is exported to the USA annually, making it unofficially the country's largest export earner.

The decline in production of Jamaica's traditional export crops and industries, and low international prices, has been compounded by the rising level of imports. As a result, the current deficit on the balance of payments grew from US $42.1m. in 1977 to $408.5m. in 1982. The dramatic devaluations of the Jamaica dollar in 1983 and 1984 (see below), while assisting the competitiveness of Jamaican export industries, have increased the cost of imports, especially of petroleum and foodstuffs, which comprise about 50% of total imports. The price of staple foods, such as rice and chicken, rose sharply in 1984. Petrol prices increased by 50% in January 1984, and by a further 21% in 1985. However, in the six months to September 1984, the level of imports was up by only 4% on the previous year, compared with a 17.8% growth in exports.

The Jamaican economy suffered from a prolonged recession during the 1970s, and by 1980 was in a state of crisis. The Government's budget balance had moved from a current surplus of J $11.8m. in 1976 to a deficit of J $180.6m. in 1978, and Jamaica was forced to borrow heavily from the international community. Unemployment had risen to 27.8% of the workforce by 1978, and the rate of inflation was estimated at about 30%. The JLP Government, on coming to power in 1980, prepared a three-year economic recovery plan which called for a considerable injection of foreign investment into the private sector. In 1980 the PNP Government had rejected the terms of an IMF support package, but the JLP Government reopened negotiations and secured a three-year agreement worth US $650m. The restoration of Jamaica's credit with the IMF encouraged aid from Western countries: US aid in 1982 totalled US $144m., the highest in Central and Latin America. The full potential of foreign investment in export manufacturing industries, however, was not realized, and in September 1983 the economy failed to meet the IMF's conditions for further payments, achieving average growth rates of only 1.5% per year, and failing to produce the promised current surplus on the balance of payments. An IMF stand-by agreement for US $143m. was finalized in April. The conditions for the agreement included a reduction of the budget deficit by half, from an equivalent of 15.4% of gross domestic product (GDP), within a year. The 1984/85 budget therefore proposed a package of public spending cuts, increases in taxes, and the removal of subsidies on food. Jamaica's gross external debt in 1982 reached US $2,300m. By 1984 it was estimated to have risen to $3,100m., causing a heavy burden of servicing payments, although in August the Government succeeded in rescheduling its arrears and short-term loans with foreign countries and commercial banks.

The overvaluation of the Jamaican dollar, in relation to the US dollar, led to the creation in January 1983 of a 'parallel market' in exchange rates in order to attract foreign exchange earnings back into Jamaica's banks. By November, however, the exchange rate had not stabilized and, to comply with IMF requirements, the Jamaican dollar was devalued by 43%. Further smaller devaluations continued during 1984, reducing the exchange rate for one US dollar from J $1.78 in November 1983 to J $4.58 by October 1984. Inflation, which had been running at 30% in 1980, had fallen to 6.5% in 1982. However, the depreciation of the currency, and the rise in prices, caused increases in the rate of inflation, which rose to 16.5% in 1983, and to 20.1% in the first six months of 1984. The rate of unemployment remained at 25% of the work-force, in spite of government incentives to create jobs, and was estimated to have risen to 27% in 1984. GDP, measured in constant prices, contracted by 5.4% in 1980, but grew by 1.5% in 1981, and by 0.5% in 1982. A contraction of 1% in real terms was forecast for 1984.

Jamaica is a member of the Organization of American States (see p. 191), the Caribbean Common Market (CARICOM, p. 112) and the International Bauxite Association (p. 222).

Transport and Communications

There are 330 km (205 miles) of railway, including two minor bauxite lines and a passenger line of 180 km (112 miles) which runs diagonally across the island from Kingston to Montego Bay. There are 4,737 km (2,944 miles) of main roads and 11,688 km (7,264 miles) of parochial and subsidiary roads which link towns and villages. The principal ports are Kingston and Montego Bay. The port at Kingston has four container berths, and is a major transhipment terminal for the Caribbean area. There are two international airports, at Kingston and Montego Bay, and a number of smaller airfields for local services. Jamaica has its own airline and is well served by a number of international airlines.

Social Welfare

Social welfare is undertaken by the Government. The Social Development Commission arranges and co-ordinates social welfare in the villages. Contributory national insurance and housing trust schemes are run by the Government. In 1978 there were 7,486 beds in government hospitals, and in 1979 there were 759 physicians working in the country.

Education

Primary education is compulsory in certain districts, and free education is ensured. In 1980 an estimated 93% of children between six and 11 years of age were enrolled at primary schools, while 56% of those aged 12 to 18 attended secondary schools. In 1970 only 3.9% of the adult population had received no schooling. Five of the seven faculties of the University of the West Indies are in Kingston. Expenditure on education in 1980 was J $303.8m., or 13.1% of total government spending.

Tourism

Jamaica attracts many tourists, mainly from the USA, to its beaches, mountains and historic buildings. In 1983 the island received 775,797 foreign visitors, including 209,646 cruise passengers. Revenue from tourism in 1980 was US $195m. Hotel proprietors receive tax concessions to encourage development.

Public Holidays

1985: 23 May (Labour Day), 5 August (for Independence Day), 19 October (National Heroes' Day), 25, 26 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year), 12 February (Ash Wednesday), 28–31 March (Easter).

Weights and Measures

Both the imperial and the metric systems are in use.

100 cents = 1 Jamaican dollar (J $).

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = J $5.714;
US $1 = J $4.930.

Directory

The Constitution

The Constitution came into force at the independence of Jamaica on 6 August 1962.

HEAD OF STATE

The Head of State is the British monarch, who is locally represented by a Governor-General, appointed on the recommendation of the Jamaican Prime Minister.

THE LEGISLATURE

The Senate or Upper House consists of 21 Senators of whom 13 will be appointed by the Governor-General on the advice of the Prime Minister and eight by the Governor-General on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition.

The House of Representatives consists of 60 elected members called Members of Parliament.

A person is qualified for appointment to the Senate or for election to the House of Representatives if he or she is a citizen of Jamaica or other Commonwealth country, of the age of 21 or more and has been ordinarily resident in Jamaica for the immediately preceding 12 months.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL

The Privy Council consists of six members appointed by the Governor-General after consultation with the Prime Minister, of whom at least two are persons who hold or who have held public office. The functions of the Council are to advise the Governor-General on the exercise of the Royal Prerogative of Mercy and on appeals on disciplinary matters from the three Service Commissions.

THE EXECUTIVE

The Prime Minister is appointed from the House of Representatives by the Governor-General as the person who, in the Governor-General's judgement, is best able to command the support of the majority of the members of that House.

The Leader of the Opposition is appointed by the Governor-General as the member of the House of Representatives who, in the Governor-General's judgement, is best able to command the support of the majority of those members of the House who do not support the Government.

The Cabinet consists of the Prime Minister and not fewer than 11 other Ministers appointed by the Governor-General on the advice of the Prime Minister.

THE JUDICATURE

The Judicature consists of a Supreme Court, a Court of Appeal and minor courts. Judicial matters, notably advice to the Governor-General on appointments, are considered by a Judicial Service Commission, the Chairman of which is the Chief Justice, members being the President of the Court of Appeal, the Chairman of the Public Service Commission and three others.

CITIZENSHIP

All persons born in Jamaica after independence automatically acquire Jamaican citizenship and there is also provision for the acquisition of citizenship by persons born outside Jamaica of Jamaican parents. Persons born in Jamaica (or persons born outside Jamaica of Jamaican parents) before independence who immediately prior to independence were citizens of the United Kingdom and colonies also automatically become citizens of Jamaica.

Appropriate provision is made which permits persons who do not automatically become citizens of Jamaica to be registered as such.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

The Constitution includes provisions safeguarding the fundamental freedoms of the individual, irrespective of race, place of origin, political opinions, colour, creed or sex, subject only to respect for the rights and freedoms of others and for the public interest. The fundamental freedoms include the right of life, liberty, security of the person and protection from arbitrary arrest or restriction of movement, the enjoyment of property and the protection of the law, freedom of conscience, of expression and of peaceful assembly and association, and respect for private and family life.

JAPAN

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Japan lies in eastern Asia and comprises a curved chain of more than 3,000 islands. Four large islands, named (from north to south) Hokkaido, Honshu, Shikoku and Kyushu, account for about 98% of the land area. Hokkaido lies just to the south of Sakhalin, a large Soviet island, and about 1,300 km (800 miles) east of the USSR's mainland port of Vladivostok. Southern Japan is about 150 km (93 miles) east of Korea. Although summers are temperate everywhere, the climate in winter varies sharply from cold in the north to mild in the south. Temperatures in Tokyo are generally between −6°C (21°F) and 30°C (86°F). Typhoons and heavy rains are common in summer. The language is Japanese. The major religions are Shintoism and Buddhism, and there is a minority of Christians. The national flag (proportions usually 3 by 2) is white, with a red disc (a sun without rays) in the centre. The capital is Tokyo.

Recent History

Following Japan's defeat in the Second World War, Japanese forces surrendered in August 1945. Japan signed an armistice in September 1945, agreeing to give up many of its outer islands, and the country was placed under US military occupation. A new democratic constitution, which was promulgated in November 1946 and took effect from May 1947, renounced war and abandoned the doctrine of the Emperor's divinity. Following the peace treaty of September 1951, Japan regained its sovereignty on 28 April 1952. The Tokara Archipelago and the Amami Islands (parts of the Ryukyu group) were restored to Japanese sovereignty in December 1951 and December 1953 respectively. Rival conservative political groups merged in November 1955 to form the Liberal-Democratic Party (LDP), which has held power ever since. The Bonin Islands and the remainder of the Ryukyu Islands (including Okinawa), administered by the USA from 1945, were returned to Japan in June 1968 and May 1972 respectively. Japan has also demanded the return of the Kurile Islands, annexed in 1945 by the USSR.

Japan continues to receive military support from the USA. Since 1982 Japan has been under continued pressure from the USA to increase its defence spending (which was equivalent to 0.9% of the country's gross national product in 1983 and 1984) and to assume greater responsibility for security in the Western Pacific area. Stability in South-East Asia is a vital consideration in Japanese foreign policy, since Japan depends on Asia for about one-third of its foreign trade, including imports of vital raw materials. In 1978 a treaty of peace and friendship was signed with the People's Republic of China.

In July 1972 the Prime Minister, Eisaku Sato, after holding office since November 1964, resigned and was succeeded by Kakuei Tanaka, hitherto the Minister of International Trade and Industry. Tanaka resigned as Prime Minister in December 1974, as a result of a bribery scandal involving the Lockheed Corporation of the USA, and was succeeded by Takeo Miki, a former Deputy Prime Minister. At elections to the Lower House of the Diet in December 1976, the LDP lost its overall majority for the first time. This reverse forced Miki to resign, and he was replaced by Takeo Fukuda, a former Deputy Prime Minister. The LDP suffered another setback in July 1977, at elections for one-half of the seats in the Upper House of the Diet, and in November Fukuda carried out a major reshuffle of the Cabinet, bringing in a number of economic experts. In the LDP presidential election of November 1978 Fukuda was unexpectedly defeated by Masayoshi Ohira, the LDP Secretary-General. Ohira became Prime Minister in December, and a new Cabinet was formed. Lacking an overall majority in the Lower House and facing increasing opposition to proposed tax increases, the LDP legislative programme was seriously hindered.

At elections to the Lower House in October 1979 the LDP again failed to win an overall majority, and significant gains were made by the Communists. Ohira survived a challenge to his leadership of the LDP, but in May 1980 the Government was defeated in a motion of 'no confidence', proposed by the Japan Socialist Party, and Ohira dissolved the Lower House. Ohira died before the elections in June, when the LDP won 284 of the 511 seats, although obtaining only a minority of the votes cast. In July Zenko Suzuki, a relatively unknown compromise candidate, was elected President of the LDP and subsequently appointed Prime Minister. He faced a series of crises during 1981, including a setback in relations with the USA and criticism from the opposition over Japan's defence policy. Economic tensions with the USA and the EEC heightened, owing to the continued growth of Japanese exports, which were partly curbed by voluntary restraints. In November 1981 Suzuki reshuffled the Cabinet, distributing major posts among the five feuding LDP factions. The growing factionalism of the LDP and the worsening economic crisis (with the yen falling dramatically to a five-year low) led to the resignation of Suzuki as Prime Minister and LDP President in October 1982.

Suzuki's successor was Yasuhiro Nakasone, who was supported by the Suzuki and Tanaka factions of the LDP. In his former post, as Minister of State and Director-General of the Administrative Management Agency, Nakasone had been responsible for implementing the Suzuki Government's expenditure cuts. At elections in June 1983 for one-half of the seats in the Upper House, a new electoral system was used. Of the 126 contested seats, 50 were filled on the basis of proportional representation. As a result, two small parties entered the House for the first time. Nevertheless, the LDP increased its strength from 134 to 137 members in the 252-seat chamber. This result was seen as an endorsement of Nakasone's policies of increased spending on defence, closer ties with the USA and greater Japanese involvement in international affairs.

In October 1983, after a trial lasting nearly seven years, Kakuei Tanaka, the former Prime Minister, was found guilty of bribery in the Lockheed scandal. The Tanaka faction of the LDP held key positions in Nakasone's Cabinet, and Tanaka refused to resign his seat in the Diet, pending another appeal. This led to a boycott of the Diet by the opposition, which forced Nakasone to call early elections to the Lower House in December. The election campaign was dominated by the issues of political ethics and Nakasone's forthright style of leadership. The LDP suffered the worst defeat in its history, losing 36 seats (and its majority) in the Lower House. Its previous strength in the Lower House, however, had been inflated by a sympathy vote following the death of Ohira during the 1980 election campaign. In 1983 the LDP won 45.8% of the total votes (on a 67% turn-out), compared with 47.9% in 1980. Nakasone came second (behind Takeo Fukuda) in his district, whereas Tanaka was returned with an overwhelming majority. The Komeito, Democratic Socialist and Socialist Parties gained seats, while the Communists and the New Liberal Club (NLC) lost seats. A coalition was formed between the LDP and the NLC (which had originally split from the LDP over the Tanaka affair) and several independents, and Nakasone remained as President of the LDP by promising to reduce Tanaka's influence. Six members of Tanaka's faction held posts in Nakasone's new Cabinet, including that of Minister of Finance.

Following the trial of Tanaka, a series of reforms was introduced, whereby Cabinet members were required to disclose the extent of their personal assets. Owing to the many opportunities for evasion, however, these reforms were regarded by some as superficial. Nakasone's domestic policy was based on the 'Three Reforms': administrative reforms, particularly of government-run enterprises such as the railways; fiscal reforms, to enable the Government to balance its budget after many years of persistent deficit; and educational reforms, to liberalize the rigid examination-dominated system. In March 1984 Nakasone introduced Japan's most austere budget since 1955, based on a target economic growth rate of 4.1% for the coming year.

In November 1984 Nakasone was re-elected as President of the LDP, guaranteeing him two further years in office as Prime Minister, the first to serve a second term since Eisaku Sato (1964–72). The unexpected late challenge to his leadership by part of the Tanaka faction (headed by Susumu Nikaido, Vice-President of the LDP) was indicative of the widespread disaffection with Nakasone's assertive style of leadership. The continued importance of the Tanaka faction was underlined when six members were awarded portfolios in the new Cabinet.

Nakasone was committed to increasing defence spending beyond 1% of GNP in 1985, and to raising Japan's international status by fostering friendly relations with other world leaders. Nakasone made successful tours to the USA, Australia and South-East Asia, to promote political and social ties. However, there is continued concern in the EEC over trade protectionism in Japan, and in the USA over the imbalance of bilateral trade. Partial deregulation of the financial markets has been introduced in an attempt to alleviate the problem.

Government

Under the Constitution of 1946, the Emperor is Head of State but has no governing power. Legislative power is vested in the bicameral Diet, consisting of the House of Representatives or Lower House (511 seats), whose members are elected for a four-year term, and the House of Councillors or Upper House (252 seats), members of which are elected for six years, one-half being elected every three years. At the Upper House election of June 1983, an element of proportional representation was introduced, when 50 national seats were determined according to the number of votes for each party. There is universal suffrage at the age of 20. Executive power is vested in the Cabinet. The Prime Minister is appointed by the Emperor (on designation by the Diet) and himself appoints the other Ministers. The Cabinet is responsible to the Diet.

Japan has 47 prefectures, each administered by an elected Governor.

Defence

Although the Constitution renounces war and the use of force, the right of self-defence is not excluded. Japan maintains ground, maritime and air self-defence forces. Military service is voluntary. The USA provides equipment and training staff and also maintains bases. The total strength of the self-defence forces in July 1984 was 245,000, comprising: army 155,000, navy 44,000 and air force 46,000. Proposed expenditure on defence for 1985/86 was 3,140,000m. yen.

Economic Affairs

Japan is not well endowed with natural resources, and more than 67% of the total land area is forested. The country is self-sufficient in rice but has to import about 50% of its requirements of other cereals and fodder crops. Mineral resources are meagre, except for limestone and sulphur, and Japanese industry is heavily dependent on imported raw materials and fuels. Petroleum accounted for 36% of Japan's import costs in 1983, and the Government has authorized the building of three nuclear and eight coal-fired power stations as part of a programme to reduce the country's dependence on imported petroleum. Japan relies on imports for 88% of its total energy requirements. Since 1969 concessions have been granted for off-shore petroleum exploration in the Korean Straits, the Sea of Japan and off Hokkaido Island. Drilling began in 1971. The Japan National Oil Company (JNOC) was established in 1978.

Based on the promotion of manufacturing industries for the export market, Japan achieved and maintained a very high rate of economic growth after 1945. Gross national product (GNP) grew at an average annual rate of 10.3% between 1962 and 1972, and in 1971 Japan's GNP became the second largest in the world, ranking behind only the USA (Soviet bloc countries excluded). In 1982, according to estimates by the World Bank, Japan's GNP per head (at average 1980–82 prices) was US $10,080, a level comparable to that of industrialized countries in Western Europe. Between 1960 and 1982 the average annual increase in Japan's GNP per head was 6.1% in real terms, one of the fastest growth rates in the world. The average rise in overall gross domestic product, measured in constant prices was 10.4% per year in 1960–70, slowing to 4.6% per year in 1970–82. In 1983/84 the growth rate of GNP in real terms was 5.3% (compared with 3.3% in 1982/83), showing the underlying strength of the Japanese economy in a worldwide recession. In 1984/85 growth of 5.6% was anticipated, but the rate of growth was expected to fall to an estimated 4.2% in 1985/86. Increased consumer spending accounted for a large part of the recent growth in the economy. The 1979–85 Economic Plan originally envisaged an average annual growth rate of 5.5%, but this figure was revised to 3.4% in March 1983.

The 1982/83 budget represented the lowest rate of expansion for 26 years. The 1984/85 budget was increased by only 1.9% over 1982/83 figures, while the 1985/86 budget envisaged total expenditure of 52,499m. yen, which represented a 3.7% increase over 1984/85. The cost of servicing government bonds became the largest item of expenditure for the first time. A five-year 'freeze' on general expenditure was introduced, to enable the Government to cease issuing deficit-financing bonds to make up the 30% of government spending not covered by tax revenues. The Nakasone Government has been unable to introduce tax reforms because of almost universal opposition, and the proportion of government spending that is covered by tax revenue is far lower than in any other advanced nation. Defence spending increased by 6.9%, and surpassed 1% of the GNP for the first time. The unemployment rate, however, remains below 3% of the labour force. In 1983 consumer prices rose by only 1.9% over the previous year, the lowest annual rise in 24 years. In 1984 consumer prices were expected to rise by 2.4%.

The economy was hit by the oil crisis in 1979 and, after achieving massive trade surpluses in 1977 and 1978, a deficit of US $13,451m. was recorded in 1979/80. In 1980/81, however, there were signs of recovery and the deficit narrowed to $10,720.7m. In 1981/82 there was a surplus of $8,740.5m., and this fell to $6,900m. in 1982/83, with exports declining by 8.7% and imports by 7.9%. In the calendar year 1983 there was a trade surplus of $31,450m., then a record, and in 1984 it was even higher, at $44,350m. The 1984 surplus reflected a 15.7% increase in exports, to $168,270m., and an 8.7% growth in imports, to $123,920m. Exports to the USA reached $59,940m., an increase of 40%, and accounted for about 70% of total export growth, which was partly attributable to the favourable exchange rate. However, the yen's relative strength against other currencies did not result in higher Japanese imports from other countries. There was prolonged and growing criticism from the USA over the strength and extent of trade protectionism in Japan. Exports were expected to rise by only 6.4% in 1985/86, as the US growth rate slackens. The current surplus on the balance of payments reached a record $35,020m. in 1984, compared with a previous peak of $20,800m. in 1983, as lower petroleum prices cut import costs and exports rose because of the US economic recovery. Industrial production rose by 7.0% in 1980, and by 3.7% in 1981, but in 1982 it fell by 0.6% because of increased resistance by other states to Japanese exports. Industrial output went up by 3.6% in 1983, and by 11.2% in 1984, the largest annual increase for 11 years.

Farming in Japan is labour-intensive, but the proportion of the working population employed in agriculture, forestry and fishing fell from 19% in 1970 to 9% in 1982. Japan's agricultural labour force totalled 4.8m. in 1983. Japan produces about 72% of its total food requirements. The principal crops are rice, wheat, barley and potatoes. Japan is a leading fishing nation, both in coastal and deep-sea waters. Since 1976, however, the fishing industry has been seriously affected by the establishment of exclusive fishing zones by many countries.

Industrial activity (mining, manufacturing and construction) employed 33% of the labour force in 1983, compared with 44% in 1970. Heavy industries predominate in the manufacturing sector, particularly motor vehicles, steel, machinery, electrical equipment and chemicals. In 1983 Japan was the world's largest producer of ships and passenger cars, and the second largest producer of synthetic fibres, cement, synthetic resins and steel. As a whole, Japan ranks second in the world (after the USA) in industrial production. Japan's estimated investment in technology in 1984/85 was $28,800m., which was surpassed only by the USA.

Japan has been under pressure to revalue its currency in view of the favourable conditions of Japanese exports on the world market. The yen was revalued in December 1971 and floated in February 1973, and remained steady until 1977 when, until early 1979, it appreciated greatly against the US dollar and other currencies. The impact of increases in the price of petroleum abruptly reversed this trend, and during 1979 the yen fell by approximately 30% against the US dollar, despite continued intervention by the Bank of Japan and a restrictive monetary policy, which included a 4% increase in bank rate to 6.25%. At the beginning of 1980 the yen depreciated against the US dollar, reflecting an increase in Japan's current account deficit. However, monetary measures, introduced to attract foreign investment, allowed the yen to appreciate, a trend which did not, as expected, continue into 1981. The yen reached a five-year low in November 1982, largely as a result of the high level of US interest rates, but it quickly recovered. By February 1985, however, the yen had fallen against the US dollar to its lowest level since November 1982.

Transport and Communications

Despite difficulties of terrain, rail transport is highly developed. Japanese National Railways operated 21,419 km (13,309 miles) of track in 1982. Work began in 1971 on a new 'super express' railway network, linking all the major cities. To be completed by the end of the century, it will total 7,000 km (4,350 miles) in length. A rail tunnel of 54 km (33½ miles) is to link the islands of Hokkaido and Honshu. The whole project, estimated to cost 385,000m. yen, was scheduled for completion in 1985. Japan's road network covered 1,123,283 km (697,975 miles) in 1983, and plans have been made to cover the country with a network of major roads, totalling 7,600 km (4,700 miles). Large and small craft ply between the islands and there is a large merchant fleet of ocean-going vessels. The main ports are Yokohama, Nagasaki and Kobe. Japan Air Lines (JAL) is state-subsidized and there are about 40 other air transport companies. There are three international airports, at Tokyo, Osaka and Narita. Japan's first operational communications satellite, designed to improve links between the mainland and outlying islands, was launched in 1983.

Social Welfare

Almost all of the population are insured under the various schemes covering health, welfare annuities, unemployment and industrial accidents. Workers normally retire at the age of 55, the average pension being about 40% of salary. In 1977 Japan had 8,470 hospital establishments, with a total of 1,207,003 beds, equivalent to one for every 94 inhabitants. In 1979 there were 148,580 physicians working in the country.

Education

A kindergarten system provides education for children aged between three and five years of age, although the majority of kindergartens are privately controlled. At the age of six, children are required to attend elementary schools (shogakko), from which they proceed, after six years, to lower secondary schools (chugakko) for a further three years. Education is compulsory to the age of 15, and there are plans to increase the age limit to 18. In 1981 all children aged six to 11 were enrolled at primary schools, while 92% of those aged 12 to 17 received secondary education. Upper secondary schools provide a three-year course in general topics or a vocational course in subjects such as agriculture, commerce, fine art and technical studies. Higher education is divided into three types of institution. Universities (daigaku) offer a four-year degree course, as well as post-graduate courses. Japan has more than 400 universities, both public and private. Junior colleges (tanki-daigaku) provide less specialized two- to three-year courses. Both universities and junior colleges provide facilities for teacher-training. Technical colleges (tokushu-kyoiku-gakko) offer a five-year specialized training for technicians in many fields of engineering.

Tourism

The forests and mountains, pagodas and temples, traditional festivals and the classical Kabuki theatre are some of the many tourist attractions of Japan. In 1983 there were about 2m. foreign visitors to Japan.

Public Holidays

1985: 3 May (Constitution Memorial Day), 5 May (Children's Day), 15 September (Respect for the Aged Day), 23 September (Autumnal Equinox), 10 October (Sports Day), 3 November (Culture Day), 23 November (Labour Thanksgiving Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 15 January (Adults' Day), 11 February (National Foundation Day), 21 March (Vernal Equinox Day), 29 April (Emperor's Birthday).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

The Constitution

The Constitution of Japan was promulgated on 3 November 1946 and came into force on 3 May 1947. The following is a summary of its major provisions:

THE EMPEROR

Articles 1–8. The Emperor derives his position from the will of the people. In the performance of any State act as defined in the Constitution, he must seek the advice and approval of the Cabinet though he may delegate the exercise of his functions, which include: (i) the appointment of the Prime Minister and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; (ii) promulgation of laws, cabinet orders, treaties and constitutional amendments; (iii) the convocation of the Diet, dissolution of the House of Representatives and proclamation of elections to the Diet; (iv) the appointment and dismissal of Ministers of State and as well as the granting of amnesties, reprieves and pardons and the ratification of treaties, conventions or protocols; (v) the awarding of honours and performance of ceremonial functions.

RENUNCIATION OF WAR

Article 9. Japan renounces for ever the use of war as a means of settling international disputes.

Articles 10–40 refer to the legal and human rights of individuals guaranteed by the constitution.

THE DIET

Articles 41–64. The Diet is convened once a year, is the highest organ of State power and has exclusive legislative authority. It comprises the House of Representatives (511 seats) and the House of Councillors (252 seats). The members of the former are elected for four years whilst those of the latter are elected for six years and election for half the members takes place every three years. If the House of Representatives is dissolved, a general election must take place within 40 days and the Diet must be convoked within 30 days of the date of the election. Extraordinary sessions of the Diet may be convened by the Cabinet when one quarter or more of the members of either House request it. Emergency sessions of the House of Councillors may also be held. A quorum of at least one third of the Diet members is needed to carry on Parliamentary business. Any decision arising therefrom must be passed by a majority vote of those present. A bill becomes law having passed both Houses except as provided by the constitution. If the House of Councillors either vetoes or fails to take action within 60 days upon a bill already passed by the House of Representatives, the bill becomes law when passed a second time by the House of Representatives, by at least a two-thirds majority of those members present.

The Budget must first be submitted to the House of Representatives. If, when it is approved by the House of Representatives, the House of Councillors votes against it or fails to take action on it within 30 days, or failing agreement being reached by a joint committee of both Houses, a decision of the House of Representatives shall be the decision of the Diet. The above procedure also applies in respect of the conclusion of treaties.

THE EXECUTIVE

Articles 65–75. Executive power is vested in the cabinet consisting of a Prime Minister and such other Ministers as may be appointed. The Cabinet is collectively responsible to the Diet. The Prime Minister is designated from among members of the Diet by a resolution thereof.

If the House of Representatives and the House of Councillors disagree on the designation of the Prime Minister, and if no agreement can be reached even through a joint committee of both Houses, provided for by law, or if the House of Councillors fails to make designation within 10 days, exclusive of the period of recess, after the House of Representatives has made designation, the decision of the House of Representatives shall be the decision of the Diet.

The Prime Minister appoints and may remove other Ministers, a majority of whom must be from the Diet. If the House of Representatives passes a no-confidence motion or rejects a confidence motion, the whole Cabinet resigns unless the House of Representatives is dissolved within 10 days. When there is a vacancy in the post of Prime Minister, or upon the first convocation of the Diet after a general election of members of the House of Representatives, the whole Cabinet resigns.

The Prime Minister submits bills, reports on national affairs and foreign relations to the Diet. He exercises control and supervision over various administrative branches of the Government. The Cabinet's primary functions (in addition to administrative ones) are to: (a) administer the law faithfully; (b) conduct State affairs; (c) conclude treaties subject to prior (or subsequent) Diet approval; (d) administer the civil service in accordance with law; (e) prepare and present the budget to the Diet; (f) enact Cabinet orders in order to make effective legal and constitutional provisions; (g) decide on amnesties, reprieves or pardons. All laws and Cabinet orders are signed by the competent Minister of State and countersigned by the Prime Minister. The Ministers of State, during their tenure of office, are not subject to legal action without the consent of the Prime Minister. However, the right to take that action is not impaired.

Articles 76–95. Relate to the Judiciary, Finance and Local Government.

AMENDMENTS

Article 96. Amendments to the Constitution are initiated by the Diet, through a concurring vote of two-thirds or more of all the members of each House and are submitted to the people for ratification, which requires the affirmative vote of a majority of all votes cast at a special referendum or at such election as the Diet may specify.

Amendments when so ratified must immediately be promulgated by the Emperor in the name of the people, as an integral part of the Constitution.

Articles 97–99 outline the Supreme Law, while Articles 100–103 consist of Supplementary Provisions.

Political Organizations

The Political Funds Regulation Law provides that any organization which wishes to support a candidate for an elective public office must be registered as a political party. There are over 10,000 registered parties in the country, mostly of local or regional significance. The conservative Liberal-Democratic Party has the support of big business and the rural population and is also by far the richest of the political parties. The proportion of votes for the two socialist parties increased slowly at each election after 1952. The split between the two parties reflects a long-standing division between supporters of a mass popular party (now represented by the DSP) and those seeking a class party on Socialist lines. The Communist Party of Japan split in 1964, the official party being independent and supporting neither the USSR nor the People's Republic of China.

Democratic Socialist Party—DSP (Minshato): 19–12 Shiba Sakuragawa-cho 1, Minato-ku, Tokyo; tel. (3) 501-1411; f. 1960 by a right-wing faction of the Socialist Party of Japan; advocates an independent foreign policy; 72,000 mems (1983); Chair. RYOSAKU SASAKI; Sec.-Gen. SABURO TSUKAMOTO.

Judicial System

The basic principles of the legal system are set forth in the Constitution, which lays down that the whole judicial power is vested in a Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as are established by law, and enunciates the principle that no organ or agency of the Executive shall be given final judicial power. Judges are to be independent in the exercise of their conscience, and may not be removed except by public impeachment, unless judicially declared mentally or physically incompetent to perform official duties. The justices of the Supreme Court are appointed by the Cabinet, the sole exception being the Chief Justice, who is appointed by the Emperor after designation by the Cabinet.

The Court Organization Law, which came into force on 3 May 1947, decreed the constitution of the Supreme Court and the establishment of four types of inferior court—High, District, Family (established 1 January 1949), and Summary Courts. The constitution and functions of the courts are as follows:

THE SUPREME COURT

This court is the highest legal authority in the land, and consists of a Chief Justice and 14 associate justices. It has jurisdiction over Jokoku (appeals) and Kokoku (complaints), prescribed specially in codes of procedure. It conducts its hearings and renders decisions through a Grand Bench or three Petty Benches. Both are collegiate bodies, the former consisting of all justices of the Court, and the latter of five justices. A Supreme Court Rule prescribes which cases are to be handled by the respective Benches. It is, however, laid down by law that the Petty Bench cannot make decisions as to the constitutionality of a statute, ordinance, regulation, or disposition, or as to cases in which an opinion concerning the interpretation and application of the Constitution or of any laws or ordinances is at variance with a previous decision of the Supreme Court.

Chief Justice: Takaaki Hattori.
Secretary-General: Koichi Yaguchi.

INFERIOR COURTS

High Court

A High Court conducts its hearings and renders decisions through a collegiate body, consisting of three judges, though for cases of insurrection the number of judges must be five. The Court has jurisdiction over the following matters:

Koso appeals from judgments in the first instance rendered by District Courts, from judgments rendered by Family Courts, and from judgments concerning criminal cases rendered by Summary Courts.

Kokoku complaints against rulings and orders rendered by District Courts and Family Courts, and against rulings and orders concerning criminal cases rendered by Summary Courts, except those coming within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

Jokoku appeals from judgments in the second instance rendered by District Courts and from judgments rendered by Summary Courts, except those concerning criminal cases.

Actions in the first instance relating to cases of insurrection.

District Court

A District Court conducts hearings and renders decisions through a single judge or, for certain types of cases, through a collegiate body of three judges. It has jurisdiction over the following matters:

Actions in the first instance, except offences relating to insurrection, claims where the subject matter of the action does not exceed 300,000 yen, and offences liable to a fine or lesser penalty.

Koso appeals from judgments rendered by Summary Courts, except those concerning criminal cases.

Kokoku complaints against rulings and orders rendered by Summary Courts, except those coming within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and High Courts.

Family Court

A Family Court handles cases through a single judge in case of rendering judgments or decisions. However, in accordance with the provisions of other statutes it conducts its hearings and renders decisions through a collegiate body of three judges. A conciliation is effected through a collegiate body consisting of a judge and two or more members of the conciliation committee selected from among citizens.

It has jurisdiction over the following matters:

Judgment and conciliation with regard to cases relating to family as provided for by the Law for Adjudgment of Domestic Relations.

Judgment with regard to the matters of protection of juveniles as provided for by the Juvenile Law.

Actions in the first instance relating to adult criminal cases of violation of the Labour Standard Law, the Law for Prohibiting Liquors to Minors, or other laws especially enacted for protection of juveniles.

Summary Court

A Summary Court handles cases through a single judge, and has jurisdiction in the first instance over the following matters:

Claims where the value of the subject matter does not exceed 300,000 yen (excluding claims for cancellation or change of administrative dispositions).

Actions which relate to offences liable to fine or lesser penalty, offences liable to a fine as an optional penalty, and certain specified offences such as habitual gambling and larceny.

A Summary Court cannot impose imprisonment or a graver penalty. When it deems proper the imposition of a sentence of imprisonment or a graver penalty, it must transfer such cases to a District Court, but it can impose imprisonment with hard labour not exceeding three years for certain specified offences.

A Procurator's Office, with its complement of procurators, is established for each of these courts. The procurators conduct searches, institute prosecutions and supervise the execution of judgments in criminal cases, and act as representatives of the public interests in civil cases of public concern.

Religion

The traditional religions of Japan are Shintoism and Buddhism. Neither is exclusive, and many Japanese subscribe at least nominally to both. Since 1945 a number of new religions have grown up, based on a fusion of Shinto, Buddhist, Daoist, Confucian and Christian beliefs.

SHINTOISM

Shintoism is an indigenous cult of nature and ancestor worship. It is divided into two cults: national Shintoism, which is represented by the shrines; and sectarian Shintoism, which developed towards the end of the Tokugawa Shogunate. In 1868, Shinto was designated a national religion, and all Shinto shrines acquired the privileged status of a national institution. After the adoption of the present constitution in 1947, however, complete freedom of religion was introduced, and state support of Shinto was banned. There are an estimated 81,000 shrines, 101,000 priests and c. 90m. adherents.

The Press

The average circulation of Japanese dailies is the highest in the world after the USSR and the USA, and the circulation per head of population is highest at about 579 copies per 1,000 inhabitants (1982). The large number of weekly news journals is a notable feature of the Japanese press. Technically the Japanese press is highly advanced, and the major newspapers are issued in simultaneous editions in the main centres.

The two newspapers with the largest circulations are the Asahi Shimbun and Yomiuri Shimbun. Other influential papers include Mainichi Shimbun, Nihon Keizai Shimbun, Chunichi Shimbun and Sankei Shimbun.

BANKING

Japan's central bank and note-issuing body is the Bank of Japan, founded in 1882. More than half the credit business of the country is handled by 77 commercial banks (14 city banks and 63 regional banks), seven trust banks and three long-term credit banks, collectively designated 'All Banks'. The most important of these are the city banks, some of which have a distinguished history, reaching back to the days of the zaibatsu, the private entrepreneurial organizations on which Japan's capital wealth was built up before the Second World War. Although the zaibatsu were abolished as integral industrial and commercial enterprises during the Allied Occupation, the several businesses and industries which bear the former zaibatsu names, such as Mitsubishi, Mitsui and Sumitomo, continue to flourish and to give each other mutual assistance through their respective banks and trust corporations. Among the commercial banks, one, the Bank of Tokyo, specializes in foreign exchange business, while the Industrial Bank of Japan provides a large proportion of the finance for capital investment by industry. The Long-Term Credit Bank of Japan and Nippon Credit Bank Ltd also specialize in industrial finance; the work of these three privately-owned banks is supplemented by the government-controlled Japan Development Bank.

The Government has established a number of other specialized organs to supply essential services not performed by the private banks. Thus the Japan Export-Import Bank advances credits for exports of heavy industrial products and imports of raw materials in bulk. A Housing Loan Corporation assists firms building housing for their employees, while the Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Finance Corporation gives loans to the named industries for equipment purchases. Similar services are provided for small businesses by the Small Business Finance Corporation.

An important role is played in the financial activity of the country by co-operatives, and by the many small enterprise institutions. Each prefecture has its own federation of co-operatives, with the Central Co-operative Bank of Agriculture and Forestry as the common central financial institution. This Central Co-operative Bank also serves as an agent for the Government's Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Finance Corporation.

There are also three types of private financial institutions for small business. The 69 Sogo Banks (Mutual Loan and Savings Banks) are now similar to commercial banks. There are 461 Credit Associations and 456 Shinkin Banks (Credit Associations), which loan only to members. The latter also receive deposits.

The commonest form of savings is through the government-operated Postal Savings System, which collects petty savings from the public by means of the post office network. Total deposits stood at 84,806,239m. yen in December 1983. The funds thus made available are used as loan funds by the Government financial institutions, through the Ministry of Finance's Trust Fund Bureau.

Clearing houses operate in each major city of Japan, and total 178 institutions. The largest are those of Tokyo and Osaka.

Subways and Monorails

Subway service is available in Tokyo, Osaka, Kobe, Nagoya, Sapporo, Yokohama, Kyoto and Fukuoka with a combined network of about 380 km. Most new subway lines are directly linked with existing JNR or private railway terminals which connect the cities with suburban areas.

Japan started its first monorail system on a commercial scale in 1964 with straddle-type cars between central Tokyo and Tokyo International Airport, a distance of 13 km. In 1982 the total length of monorail was 27.5 km. Work started in 1971 on the 54-km Seikan Tunnel (electric rail only) linking Honshu island with Hokkaido, which was scheduled to be completed in 1985.

ROADS

In March 1982 Japan's road network extended to 1,115,148 km, including 3,010 km of automobile highways. Plans have been made to cover the country with a trunk automobile highway network with a total length of 7,600 km, of which 3,500 km were expected to be completed by 1982.

There is a national omnibus service, 57 publicly operated services and 297 privately operated services.

SHIPPING

Shipping in Japan is not nationalized but is supervised by the Ministry of Transport. On 30 June 1982, the merchant fleet had a total displacement of 41,494,000 gross tons. The main ports are Yokohama, Nagoya and Kobe.

JORDAN

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan is an almost land-locked state in western Asia. It is bordered by Israel to the west, by Syria to the north, by Iraq to the east and by Saudi Arabia to the south. The port of Aqaba, in the far south, gives Jordan a narrow outlet to the Red Sea. The climate is hot and dry. The average annual temperature is about 15°C (60°F) but there are wide diurnal variations. Temperatures in Amman are generally between −1°C (30°F) and 32°C (90°F). More extreme conditions are found in the valley of the River Jordan and on the shores of the Dead Sea (a lake on the Israeli-Jordanian frontier), where the temperature may exceed 50°C (122°F) in summer. The official language is Arabic. More than 90% of the population are Sunni Muslims, while there are small communities of Christians and Shi'i Muslims. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has three equal horizontal stripes, of black, white and green, with a red triangle, containing a seven-pointed white star, at the hoist. The capital is Amman.

Recent History

Palestine (including the present-day West Bank of Jordan) and Transjordan (the East Bank) were formerly parts of Turkey's Ottoman Empire. During the First World War (1914–18), when Turkey was allied with Germany, the Arabs under Ottoman rule rebelled. British forces, with Arab support, occupied Palestine and Transjordan in 1917–18, when the Turks withdrew.

British occupation continued after the war, when the Ottoman Empire was dissolved. In 1920 Palestine and Transjordan were formally placed under British administration by a League of Nations mandate. In 1921 Abdullah ibn Hussein, a member of the Hashimi (Hashemite) dynasty of Arabia, was proclaimed Amir (Emir) of Transjordan. In the same year, his brother, Faisal, became King of neighbouring Iraq (also administered by the United Kingdom under a League of Nations mandate). The two new monarchs were sons of Hussein ibn Ali, the Sharif of Mecca, who had proclaimed himself King of the Hijaz (now part of Saudi Arabia) in 1916. The British decision to nominate Hashemite princes to be rulers of Iraq and Transjordan was a reward for Hussein's co-operation in the wartime campaign against Turkey.

During the period of the British mandate, Transjordan (formally separated from Palestine in 1923) gained increasing autonomy. In 1928 the United Kingdom acknowledged the nominal independence of Transjordan, although retaining certain financial and military powers. Amir Abdullah followed a generally pro-British policy and supported the Allied cause in the Second World War (1939–45). The mandate was terminated on 22 March 1946, when Transjordan attained full independence. On 25 May Abdullah was proclaimed King, and a new constitution took effect.

When the British Government terminated its mandate in Palestine in May 1948, Jewish leaders in the area proclaimed the State of Israel but Palestinian Arabs, supported by the armies of Arab states, opposed Israeli claims and hostilities continued until July. Transjordan's forces occupied about 5,900 sq km of Palestine, including East Jerusalem, and this was confirmed by the armistice with Israel in April 1949. In June 1949 the country was renamed Jordan, and in April 1950, following a referendum, King Abdullah formally annexed the West Bank territory, which contained many Arab refugees from Israeli-held areas.

In July 1951 King Abdullah was assassinated in Jerusalem by a Palestinian Arab belonging to an extremist Islamic organization. The murdered king was succeeded by his eldest son, Talal ibn Abdullah, hitherto Crown Prince. At the time of the assassination, Talal was abroad, receiving medical treatment for a nervous disorder. He returned to Jordan in September 1951. A new constitution was adopted in November 1951, and approved by King Talal in January 1952. Because of Talal's mental illness, however, a joint session of the National Assembly proclaimed him unfit to reign, and declared him deposed, in August 1952. The crown passed to his son, Hussein ibn Talal, then 16 years of age. King Hussein formally took power in May 1953.

In March 1956, responding to Arab nationalist sentiment, King Hussein dismissed Lieut-Gen. John Glubb ('Glubb Pasha'), the British army officer who had been Chief of Staff of the Arab Legion (the Jordanian armed forces) since 1939. The Legion, with about 20,000 men, had been created in 1920 by the United Kingdom and was financed and equipped by the British Government. However, Jordan's treaty relationship with the United Kingdom was ended in March 1957. British troops completed their withdrawal from Jordan in July.

In February 1958 Jordan and Iraq formed an Arab Federation, with King Faisal II of Iraq (a second cousin of King Hussein) as Head of State. In July, however, a revolution overthrew the Iraqi monarchy, and King Faisal was killed, so the Federation proved to be short-lived.

During the turbulent reign of Hussein, Jordan has had a succession of Prime Ministers, but the King himself holds executive power and has remained the central figure in the country's political life. Despite political upheavals in Jordan and elsewhere in the Middle East, King Hussein has vigorously maintained his personal rule and has survived attempted assassination and revolt. In April 1965 Hussein nominated his brother, Hassan ibn Talal, to be Crown Prince, so excluding the King's own children from succession to the throne.

Jordan and Israel each have a small strip of coastline on the Gulf of Aqaba, providing access to the Red Sea. In May 1967 the United Arab Republic (Egypt) barred Israeli shipping from entering the Red Sea. In retaliation, Israel launched attacks on its Arab neighbours in June 1967, quickly overcoming opposition and making substantial territorial gains. The Six-Day War, as it is known, left Israel in possession of all Jordanian territory on the West Bank. The Old City of Jerusalem was incorporated into Israel, while the remainder of the conquered area has the status of an Israeli 'administered territory'. Many refugees are still housed in camps on the East Bank. Jordan used to be a base for several Palestinian Arab guerrilla groups, mainly forces of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), which made armed raids on the administered territories. The strength of these organizations frequently constituted a challenge to the Jordanian Government and, after a civil war lasting from September 1970 to July 1971, King Hussein expelled the guerrilla groups. Since then, Hussein has not allowed guerrilla activity from Jordan, but by 1979 he was again on good terms with the PLO.

In September 1971 King Hussein announced the formation of the Jordanian National Union, to be the country's sole permitted political organization. In March 1972 it was renamed the Arab National Union (ANU), but in April 1974 Hussein dissolved its executive committee. The ANU was abolished in February 1976, and since then Jordan has had no formal political parties.

In March 1972 King Hussein presented a plan for a United Arab Kingdom in which a Palestinian region (capital Jerusalem) would be federated with the Jordanian region, whose capital, Amman, would be the federal capital. Israel, the PLO and Egypt reacted unfavourably, and Egypt broke off diplomatic relations, which were not restored until September 1973, when King Hussein became reconciled with President Sadat of Egypt and President Assad of Syria.

In October 1973 another Arab–Israeli war broke out when Egypt and Syria launched simultaneous attacks on Israeli-held territory. Units of the Jordanian army were sent to support the Syrian offensive on the Golan Heights. Aid to Jordan from Kuwait and other wealthy Arab states, which had been suspended following the Jordanian action against Palestinian commandos, was restored after the 1973 war.

During early 1974 King Hussein became increasingly estranged from the governments of other Arab states when it became clear that they considered the PLO, rather than Jordan, to be the legitimate representative of the Palestinian Arabs. At an Arab summit meeting in Rabat, Morocco, in October 1974, King Hussein acknowledged this view, and supported a unanimous resolution which gave the PLO the right to establish an independent national authority on any piece of Palestinian land to be liberated.

The summit meeting at Rabat adopted a resolution which recognized the PLO as 'the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people'. In November 1974, as a response to this resolution, both chambers of the Jordanian National Assembly (which had equal representation for the East and West Banks) approved constitutional amendments which empowered the King to dissolve the Assembly and to postpone elections for up to 12 months. The Assembly was dissolved later that month, although it was briefly reconvened in February 1976, when it approved a constitutional amendment which gave the King power to postpone elections indefinitely and to convene the Assembly as required. A royal decree of April 1978 provided for the creation of a National Consultative Council, with 60 members appointed for a two-year term by the King, on the Prime Minister's recommendation, to debate proposed legislation. The Council was dissolved, and the National Assembly reconvened, in January 1984 (see below).

During the late 1970s Jordan and Syria co-operated closely, but in late 1980 mediation by Saudi Arabia was necessary to prevent military build-ups on both sides of the Jordanian-Syrian border from escalating into war. In the Gulf War between Iran and Iraq, which began in September 1980, Syria supports Iran and disapproves of Jordan's support for Iraq. Syria also suspects Jordan of being sympathetic towards the Camp David agreements of September 1978, which brought about peace between Egypt and Israel, though King Hussein has publicly condemned the accords.

After the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in June 1982, Hussein found himself with a key role in a plan for peace in the Middle East, proposed by President Ronald Reagan of the USA. The plan involved the creation of an autonomous Palestinian authority on the West Bank, in association with Jordan. However, following talks with Hussein, Yasser Arafat, the Chairman of the PLO, rejected the plan. Jordan subsequently gave diplomatic support to Arafat when a Syrian-backed revolt erupted in May 1983 against his leadership of the Palestine National Liberation Movement (Fatah), the major guerrilla group within the PLO. During the last three months of the year, Jordanian diplomats in several European countries, and targets in Amman, came under attack from terrorists who were thought to be members of a radical Arab group, based in Syria, which was angered by Jordan's backing for Arafat, by its call for Egypt to be re-admitted to the community of Arab states and by the possibility of a revival of the Reagan plan.

With a view to recovering something from the West Bank before Jewish settlement there produces a de facto extension of Israel, Hussein dissolved the National Consultative Council in January 1984 and recalled the National Assembly for its first session since 1967. He thereby created the kind of Palestinian forum (60% of Jordan's population of 2.4m. are Palestinian and there are 1.3m. Palestinians living on the West Bank) which was called for in the Reagan plan, and effectively infringed the Rabat resolution of 1974, which recognized the PLO as the sole representative of the Palestinian people. Israel allowed the surviving West Bank deputies to attend the Assembly, which approved constitutional amendments enabling elections to be held on the East Bank alone, and West Bank deputies to be chosen by the Assembly itself. Also in January, the Jordanian Council of Ministers resigned, and a new one, containing a higher proportion of Palestinians, took office.

King Hussein embarked on a series of talks with Yasser Arafat in January 1984, hoping to arrive at an agreed policy on the issue of Palestinian autonomy. This development and the resuscitation of parliamentary life in Jordan were not, as it turned out, the prelude to a concerted move by Hussein and Arafat towards establishing a Palestinian state on the West Bank. The reconvened Jordanian National Assembly provided a focus for debate which revealed strong opposition to the Reagan plan among Jordanian Palestinians, while Hussein and Arafat were at pains to stress that they stood by the resolution which had been adopted at the Arab summit meeting of 1974, recognizing the PLO as 'the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people'.

These developments revealed a split in the Arab world between a moderate body of opinion (formed by the alliance of Jordan, Egypt and Arafat's wing of the PLO) on one side, and a more radical group, including Syria (which considers itself to be the leader of the Arab states in natural succession to a disgraced Egypt), Libya and the rebel wing of the PLO, on the other. In February 1984 the Jordanian Embassy in Tripoli, Libya, was burnt down during a demonstration, and Jordan responded by severing diplomatic relations with Libya. Attacks by militant Arab groups on Jordanian diplomats around the world took place at irregular intervals throughout 1984. Responsibility for the murder of a Jordanian diplomat in Bucharest, Romania, in December 1984 was claimed by the re-emergent Black September group, which was formed after the expulsion of the PLO from Jordan in September 1970.

At the beginning of 1984 the US Government renewed its efforts to gain Congressional approval for a $220m. plan to supply Jordan with arms and equipment for an 8,000-strong Jordanian strike force. The US envisaged this force responding to requests for military assistance from Arab governments within a 2,400-km (1,500-mile) radius of Jordan. King Hussein tried to distance Jordan from any interest or involvement in the creation of such a force. Then, in March, the planned sale to Jordan of 1,613 Stinger anti-aircraft missiles was cancelled by President Reagan, partly owing to pro-Israeli opposition to the plan in the US Congress, but also owing to King Hussein's recent harsh criticism of US policy in the Middle East, which he judged to be inflexibly pro-Israeli, rendering the USA an unsuitable mediator in any peace negotiations. In June the Reagan administration abandoned its plans for a Jordanian strike force.

King Hussein, frustrated by the unwillingness of the USA to use its influence with Israel to 'freeze' Jewish settlement of the West Bank (and unable to buy arms from the USA), began to look to the USSR for diplomatic backing in his search for peace in the Middle East and for armaments. Jordan purchased an air defence system from the USSR in January 1985, having already made an agreement to buy French anti-aircraft missiles in September 1984.

In September 1984, to the anger of radical Arab states, Jordan decided to re-establish diplomatic relations with Egypt, five years after breaking them off in protest at the Egypt-Israel peace treaty of 1979. President Mubarak of Egypt has since given his support to King Hussein's proposals for peace negotiations between the Arabs and the Israelis. Hussein rejected the Israeli offer of direct negotiations, excluding the PLO, in October, calling instead for a conference of all the concerned parties in the Middle East, including the PLO on an equal footing with nation states in the region. He requires Israel to accept the principle of 'land for peace'—this is, talks leading to the restoration of occupied territories (including East Jerusalem) to Jordan, in return for a comprehensive Arab-Israeli peace treaty. Negotiations, according to Hussein, should proceed on the basis of the UN Security Council's resolution 242 of November 1967. This last point has been the impediment to Jordanian and PLO agreement to a programme for peace talks. Resolution 242 is not acceptable to the PLO as it refers to the Palestinian Arabs as refugees, implicitly denying the existence of a Palestinian nation and Palestinians' right to self-determination. The Palestinian National Council (PNC), which finally met in Amman, Jordan, in November 1984, replied non-committally to King Hussein's offer of a joint Jordanian-Palestinian peace initiative, without explicit rejection or acceptance of the principles embodied in resolution 242. King Hussein and Yasser Arafat continued to meet, and in February 1985 appeared to have agreed the programme of a joint peace initiative, linking UN resolutions on the Middle East with an Arab League plan that had been formulated at a summit meeting in Fez, Morocco, in 1982. They are also believed to have confirmed an agreement of August 1984 that Jordan and a sovereign Palestinian state on the West Bank would join in a confederation.

Government

Jordan is a constitutional monarchy. Legislative power is vested in a bicameral National Assembly. The Senate (House of Notables) has 30 members, appointed by the King for eight years (one-half of the members retiring every four years), while the House of Representatives (House of Deputies) has 60 members, including 50 Muslims and 10 Christians, elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution). In each House there is equal representation for the East Bank and the (occupied) West Bank. Executive power is vested in the King, who governs with the assistance of an appointed Council of Ministers, responsible to the Assembly.

There are eight administrative provinces, of which three have been occupied by Israel since June 1967.

Defence

The total strength of the Jordanian armed forces in July 1984 was 76,300. The army had 68,000 men, the air force 8,000 and the navy 300. There are paramilitary forces of 11,050 men: a Civil Militia of 7,500 and a Mobile Police Force of 3,550. Military service is voluntary. The Government plans to set up a 200,000-strong force to defend the border with Israel. The defence budget in 1984 was an estimated 205m. dinars.

Economic Affairs

At the end of the 1970s approximately 18% of the labour force was employed in agriculture, but during the early 1980s numbers fell, so that agriculture now accounts for a little over 10% of the work-force. Israeli occupation of the West Bank in 1967 resulted in a substantial loss of productive farming land. Only about 6% of Jordan's land is arable. The principal crops are wheat, barley, lentils, citrus fruits, tomatoes and water-melons. The Jordan Valley Authority has made great progress with irrigation schemes in the valley of the River Jordan.

Jordan, its economy underpinned by foreign aid and by remittances from Jordanian workers abroad (some 310,000 in 1983), has enjoyed sustained economic growth since the mid-1970s. Between 1974 and 1980 real GDP grew at an average annual rate of more than 8%. However, the growth rate slowed to about 5% per year in 1982 and 1983, and was expected to fall to between 3% and 4% in 1984. There was a small balance-of-payments deficit in both 1982 and 1983, while external trade in those two years showed deficits of US $2,500m. and $2,270m. respectively. In 1984 the trade deficit fell by 6% to $2,144m., owing to improved export earnings of more than $650m. The targets of the 1981–85 Development Plan are not being met, and, owing to lack of funds, expenditure on development in the 1984 budget was cut by 16.4%. to $533m., anticipating a budget deficit of $28.7m., and causing many large projects to be delayed. The 1985 budget calls for a 5% rise in public spending, presupposing a lower rate of economic growth than in the late 1970s. Import duties are to be raised by between 11% and 50% in an effort to cut the import bill by $30m.

There are a number of reasons for this relative decline. The bulk of Jordan's foreign aid comes from oil-rich Arab states and, as a 'front-line state' in the Arab–Israeli conflict, the country was pledged annual aid of $1,250m. for 10 years by the Arab League at its 1978 summit meeting in Baghdad. This figure has never been achieved, and the shortfall in anticipated aid widened from $500m. in 1982 to $669m. in 1983, and to $738m. in 1984. Jordan's stance on the split within the PLO, relations with Egypt and the search for a settlement of the Palestinian question is, undoubtedly, largely responsible for the failure of certain Arab countries to make their aid payments. Despite Jordan's decision to restore diplomatic links with Egypt in September 1984, Saudi Arabia honoured its aid allocation for the year. Kuwait paid the first instalment of its 1984 aid in September but, overall, payments are erratic. Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the UAE are the most reliable contributors.

The amount of aid which Jordan receives is also dependent on the condition of the Middle East's petroleum industry. The falling price of petroleum has meant that less money has been available for the oil-based economies to give in aid. For similar reasons, fewer jobs exist for expatriate workers, reducing the remittances which Jordan receives from them. Workers' remittances are Jordan's principal source of foreign exchange, and their amount rose by 30% between 1980 and 1981. There was only a 10% increase in 1982 but this was sufficient to bring in $1,100m., and in 1983 returns levelled out at some $1,000m., although they stabilized at that figure in 1984. A further blow to Jordan's economy has been the loss of its major export market in Iraq, which is reduced to buying only goods which are essential to its war effort. Sales to Iraq fell from $180.5m. in 1982 to an estimated $54.2m. in 1983. Iraq replaced Syria, which had itself succeeded Egypt as Jordan's main trading partner after the severing of links with Egypt, which followed its peace treaty with Israel in 1978. In 1983 Jordan revived a 1978 bilateral trade protocol with Egypt and also signed a new $150m. agreement in November 1984, in an attempt to find an alternative market.

In a country which is short of natural resources, phosphates predominate; they are Jordan's largest export commodity, accounting for 40% of sales ($160m.) in 1983. Returns have been affected by the low world price for phosphates, and Jordan is seeking to arrange part-payment of foreign contracts in phosphates. There are plans to increase annual production from 5.8m. tons in 1984 to 7m. tons in 1987, which would make Jordan the world's third largest producer. Development plans centre on the Jordan Phosphate Mines Company's (JPMC's) three existing sites. In the longer term, however, the industry will probably focus on a major new mine at Shidiya in the south-east, which has proven phosphate reserves of 1,000m. tons and is expected to start producing at a rate of 3m. tons per year by the late 1980s. Allied industries form an important part of Jordan's industrial development programme. A $450m. potash project on the Dead Sea began production in September 1982, and a $400m. fertilizer complex opened at Aqaba in December. The increased economic activity of Amman, owing to the disturbances in Beirut, and of Aqaba, because the Gulf War has closed Basra to the Iraqis, have benefited the economy.

Jordan is wholly dependent on imported petroleum for its energy needs. The country's oil import bill was $8m. in 1974, but higher prices for oil and greater domestic consumption caused the figure to rise to $540m. in 1983, and to an estimated $600m. (equivalent to about 80% of total export revenue) in 1984. Under the provisions of an agreement designed to relieve pressure on foreign exchange reserves, Jordan imported one-sixth (1,300 tons per day) of its 1984 crude oil requirements (valued at about $110m.) from Iraq in payment for goods. In December 1984 the Government announced a plan to double investment in oil exploration, following promising oil strikes in Azraq, and to reduce oil consumption by cutting oil subsidies ($92m. in 1984) and by increasing the prices of electricity and petroleum-based products. The aim is to reduce the annual increase in oil consumption from 11% in 1984 to 3% in 1985, and to zero in 1986. A Ministry of Energy and Mineral Wealth was created in November 1984. The delay in the proposed pipeline from Iraq to Aqaba was one reason for the renewal of an agreement to receive Saudi Arabian crude oil, via the Trans-Arabian Pipeline (Tapline), at the Zarqa refinery. Tapline had been due to close in November 1983 and, again, in 1985. Transit dues have trebled, however, and the total annual cost of the deal to Jordan is calculated at $26m.

Jordan's banking sector has grown with the economy, but the recent downturn has enforced a new caution. New rules for foreign banks were introduced in the autumn of 1983, requiring 51% of their equity to be owned by Jordanians within three years, or their licences will be revoked. This brings banks into line with all other foreign commercial establishments operating in Jordan since 1967, except insurance companies. A moratorium on the issuing of licences for new banks is now operating. The number of institutions grew nearly three-fold to 36 in the decade from 1973.

Transport and Communications

Jordan has a railway system but most traffic uses the good-quality roads. Part of the desert can be traversed safely by vehicles except in heavy rain. The port of Aqaba, in the far south, is Jordan's only outlet to the sea. The port facilities have been considerably expanded in recent years. Ten new berths and storage facilities are being built, and a separate potash berth, a container terminal and a fertilizer jetty are planned. Civil aviation is of increasing importance. There are international airports at Amman and Aqaba. International services are provided by Alia, the state airline, and several foreign airlines.

Social Welfare

There is no comprehensive welfare scheme but the Government runs medical and health services. In 1978 the East Bank region had 31 hospital establishments, with 2,568 beds, and 1,715 physicians. A new Social Security Law, providing security for both employers and employees, was put into effect in 1978 and extended in 1981. In June 1984 there were 781,564 refugees registered with UNRWA in Jordan and a further 350,779 on the West Bank.

Education

Primary education is free and, where possible, compulsory. It starts at the age of five years and eight months and lasts for six years. A further three-year period, known as the preparatory cycle, is also compulsory. The preparatory cycle is followed by the three-year secondary cycle. UNRWA provides schooling for Palestinian Arab refugees. In 1982/83 there were 2,840 primary and secondary schools, of which more than 2,000 were state-run. In 1981 an estimated 92% of East Bank children aged six to 11 attended primary schools. In 1979 about 70% of those aged 12 to 17 received secondary education. There are three universities, at Amman, Irbid and Mo'ata. In 1984 education accounted for JD 65.5m., or 8% of the total budget.

Tourism

The ancient cities of Jerash and Petra, and Jordan's proximity to biblical sites, have encouraged tourism. In 1983 there were 1,312,000 visitors to Jordan.

Public Holidays

1985: 25 May (Independence Day), 20 June (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 11 August (King Hussein's Accession), 16 August (Id ul Adha), 16 September (Islamic New Year), 14 November (King Hussein's Birthday), 25 November (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1986: 15 January (Arbor Day), 22 March (Arab League Day), 7 April (Leilat al Meiraj, Ascension of the Prophet).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force. In Jordan the dunum is 1,000 sq m (0.247 acre).

The Constitution

The revised Constitution was approved by King Talal I on 1 January 1952.

The Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan is an independent, indivisible sovereign state. Its official religion is Islam; its official language Arabic.

RIGHTS OF THE INDIVIDUAL

There is to be no discrimination between Jordanians on account of race, religion or language. Work, education and equal opportunities shall be afforded to all as far as is possible. The freedom of the individual is guaranteed, as are his dwelling and property. No Jordanian shall be exiled. Labour shall be made compulsory only in a national emergency, or as a result of a conviction; conditions, hours worked and allowances are under the protection of the State.

The Press, and all opinions, are free, except under martial law. Societies can be formed, within the law. Schools may be established freely, but they must follow a recognized curriculum and educational policy. Elementary education is free and compulsory. All religions are tolerated. Every Jordanian is eligible for public office, and choices are to be made by merit only. Power belongs to the people.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER

Is vested in the National Assembly and the King. The National Assembly consists of two houses: the Senate and the House of Representatives.

THE SENATE

The number of Senators is one-half of the number of members of the House of Representatives. Senators must be unrelated to the King, over 40, and are chosen from present and past Prime Ministers and Ministers, past Ambassadors or Ministers Plenipotentiary, past Presidents of the House of Representatives, past Presidents and members of the Court of Cassation and of the Civil and Sharia Courts of Appeal, retired officers of the rank of General and above, former members of the House of Representatives who have been elected twice to that House, etc. . . . They may not hold public office. Senators are appointed for four years. They may be reappointed. The President of the Senate is appointed for two years.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The members of the House of Representatives are elected by secret ballot in a general direct election and retain their mandate for four years. General elections take place during the four months preceding the end of the term. The President of the House is elected by secret ballot each year by the Representatives. Representatives must be Jordanians of over 30, they must have a clean record, no active business interests, and are debarred from public office. Close relatives of the King are not eligible. If the House of Representatives is dissolved, the new House shall assemble in extraordinary session not more than four months after the date of dissolution. The new House cannot be dissolved for the same reason as the last. (Parliament was dissolved by Royal Decree in November 1974, and a National Consultative Council was formed in April 1978.)

GENERAL PROVISIONS FOR THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The King summons the National Assembly to its ordinary session on 1 November each year. This date can be postponed by the King for two months, or he can dissolve the Assembly before the end of its three months' session. Alternatively, he can extend the session up to a total period of six months. Each session is opened by a speech from the throne.

Decisions in the House of Representatives and the Senate are made by a majority vote. The quorum is two-thirds of the total number of members in each House. When the voting concerns the Constitution, or confidence in the Council of Ministers, 'the votes shall be taken by calling the members by name in a loud voice'. Sessions are public, though secret sessions can be held at the request of the Government or of five members. Complete freedom of speech, within the rules of either House, is allowed.

The Prime Minister places proposals before the House of Representatives; if accepted there, they are referred to the Senate and finally sent to the King for confirmation. If one house rejects a law while the other accepts it, a joint session of the House of Representatives and the Senate is called, and a decision made by a two-thirds majority. If the King withholds his approval from a law, he returns it to the Assembly within six months with the reasons for his dissent; a joint session of the Houses then makes a decision, and if the law is accepted by this decision it is promulgated. The Budget is submitted to the National Assembly one month before the beginning of the financial year.

THE KING

The throne of the Hashemite Kingdom devolves by male descent in the dynasty of King Abdullah Ibn al Hussein. The King attains his majority on his eighteenth lunar year; if the throne is inherited by a minor, the powers of the King are exercised by a Regent or a Council of Regency. If the King, through illness or absence, cannot perform his duties, his powers are given to a Deputy, or to a Council of the Throne. This Deputy, or Council, may be appointed by Iradas (decrees) by the King, or, if he is incapable, by the Council of Ministers.

On his accession, the King takes the oath to respect and observe the provisions of the Constitution and to be loyal to the nation. As head of the State he is immune from all liability or responsibility. He approves laws and promulgates them. He declares war, concludes peace and signs treaties; treaties, however, must be approved by the National Assembly. The King is Commander-in-Chief of the Navy, the Army and the Air Force. He orders the holding of elections; convenes, inaugurates, adjourns and prorogues the House of Representatives. The Prime Minister is appointed by him, as are the President and members of the Senate. Military and civil ranks are also granted, or withdrawn, by the King. No death sentence is carried out until he has confirmed it.

MINISTERS

The Council of Ministers consists of the Prime Minister, President of the Council, and of his Ministers. Ministers are forbidden to become members of any company, to receive a salary from any company, or to participate in any financial act of trade. The Council of Ministers is entrusted with the conduct of all affairs of State, internal and external.

The Council of Ministers is responsible to the House of Representatives for matters of general policy. Ministers may speak in either House, and, if they are members of one House, they may also vote in that House. Votes of confidence in the Council are cast in the House of Representatives, and decided by a two-thirds majority. If a vote of 'no confidence' is returned, the Ministers are bound to resign. Every newly-formed Council of Ministers must present its programme to the House of Representatives and ask for a vote of confidence. The House of Representatives can impeach Ministers, as it impeaches its own members.

AMENDMENTS

Two amendments were passed in November 1974 giving the King the right to dissolve the Senate or to take away membership from any of its members, and to postpone general elections for a period not to exceed a year, if there are circumstances in which the Council of Ministers feels that it is impossible to hold elections. A further amendment in February 1976 enabled the King to postpone elections indefinitely. In January 1984 two amendments were passed, allowing elections 'in any part of the country where it is possible to hold them' (effectively, only the East Bank) and empowering the National Assembly to elect deputies from the Israeli-held West Bank.

Legislature

MAJLIS AL-UMMA

The Senate

The Senate (House of Notables) consists of 30 members, appointed by the King. A new Senate was appointed by the King on 12 January 1984.

President: Ahmad al-Louzi.

House of Representatives

Elections to the 60-seat House of Representatives (30 from both the East and West Banks) took place in April 1967. There were no political parties. The House was dissolved by Royal Decree on 23 November 1974, but reconvened briefly on 15 February 1976. Elections were postponed indefinitely.

In April 1978 a National Consultative Council was formed by Royal Decree. It consisted of 60 members appointed by the King, and served terms of two years. The third term began on 20 April 1982. The King, by his constitutional right, dissolved the Council on 7 January 1984 and reconvened the House of Representatives. Eight members from the East Bank had died since the House was last convened and by-elections to fill their seats took place on 12 March 1984. The seven vacant seats of members from the Israeli-occupied West Bank, where elections could not take place, were filled by a vote of the members of the House in accordance with a constitutional amendment unanimously approved on 9 January 1984.

Speaker: Akef al-Fayez.

Political Organizations

Political parties were banned before the elections of July 1963. In September 1971 King Hussein announced the formation of a Jordanian National Union. This was the only political organization allowed. Communists, Marxists and 'other advocates of imported ideologies' were ineligible for membership. In March 1972 the organization was renamed the Arab National Union. In April 1974 King Hussein dissolved the executive committee of the Arab National Union, and accepted the resignation of the Secretary-General. In February 1976 the Cabinet approved a law abolishing the Union. Membership was estimated at about 100,000.

Judicial System

With the exception of matters of purely personal nature concerning members of non-Muslim communities, the law of Jordan was based on Islamic Law for both civil and criminal matters. During the days of the Ottoman Empire, certain aspects of Continental law, especially French commercial law and civil and criminal procedure, were introduced. Due to British occupation of Palestine and Transjordan from 1917 to 1948, the Palestine territory has adopted, either by statute or case law, much of the English common law. Since the annexation of the non-occupied part of Palestine and the formation of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan, there has been a continuous effort to unify the law.

Court of Cassation. The Court of Cassation consists of seven judges, who sit in full panel for exceptionally important cases. In most appeals, however, only five members sit to hear the case. All cases involving amounts of more than JD100 may be reviewed by this Court, as well as cases involving lesser amounts and cases which cannot be monetarily valued. However, for the latter types of cases, review is available only by leave of the Court of Appeal, or, upon refusal by the Court of Appeal, by leave of the President of the Court of Cassation. In addition to these functions as final and Supreme Court of Appeal, the Court of Cassation also sits as High Court of Justice to hear applications in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus and certiorari dealing with complaints of a citizen against abuse of governmental authority.

Courts of Appeal. There are two Courts of Appeal, each of which is composed of three judges, whether for hearing of appeals or for dealing with Magistrates Courts' judgments in chambers. Jurisdiction of the two Courts is geographical, with the Court for the Western Region sitting in Jerusalem (which has not sat since June 1967) and the Court for the Eastern Region sitting in Amman. The regions are separated by the River Jordan. Appellate review of the Courts of Appeal extends to judgments rendered in the Courts of First Instance, the Magistrates' Courts, and Religious Courts.

Courts of First Instance. The Courts of First Instance are courts of general jurisdiction in all matters civil and criminal except those specifically allocated to the Magistrates' Courts. Three judges sit in all felony trials, while only two judges sit for misdemeanour and civil cases. Each of the seven Courts of First Instance also exercises appellate jurisdiction in cases involving judgments of less than JD20 and fines of less than JD10, rendered by the Magistrates' Courts.

Magistrates' Courts. There are 14 Magistrates' Courts, which exercise jurisdiction in civil cases involving no more than JD250 and in criminal cases involving maximum fines of JD100 or maximum imprisonment of one year.

Religious Courts. There are two types of religious court: The Sharia Courts (Muslims): and the Ecclesiastical Courts (Eastern Orthodox, Greek Melkite, Roman Catholic and Protestant). Jurisdiction extends to personal (family) matters, such as marriage, divorce, alimony, inheritance, guardianship, wills, interdiction and, for the Muslim community, the constitution of Waqfs (Religious Endowments). When a dispute involves persons of different religious communities, the Civil Courts have jurisdiction in the matter unless the parties agree to submit to the jurisdiction of one or the other of the Religious Courts involved.

Each Sharia (Muslim) Court consists of one judge (Qadi), while most of the Ecclesiastical (Christian) Courts are normally composed of three judges, who are usually clerics. Sharia Courts apply the doctrines of Islamic Law, based on the Koran and the Hadith (Precepts of Muhammad), while the Ecclesiastical Courts base their law on various aspects of Canon Law. In the event of conflict between any two Religious Courts or between a Religious Court and a Civil Court, a Special Tribunal of three judges is appointed by the President of the Court of Cassation, to decide which court shall have jurisdiction. Upon the advice of experts on the law of the various communities, this Special Tribunal decides on the venue for the case at hand.

Religion

Over 80% of the population are Sunni Muslims, and the King can trace unbroken descent from the Prophet Muhammad. There is a Christian minority, living mainly in the towns, and there are smaller numbers of non-Sunni Muslims.

Chief Justice and President of the Supreme Muslim Secular Council: Sheikh MUHAMMAD MHELAN.

Director of Sharia Courts: Sheikh SUBHI AL-MUWQQAT.

Mufti of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan: Sheikh MUHAMMAD ABDO HASHEM.

RAILWAYS

Aqaba Railway Corporation: POB 50, Ma'an; tel. 32234; telex 62225; f. 1979; length of track 292 km; Dir-Gen. SAHEL HAMZEH.

Formerly a division of the Hedjaz Jordan Railway; it retains close links with the Hedjaz but there is no regular through traffic between Aqaba and Amman. It comprises the Hedjaz line south of Menzil and the 115-km extension to Aqaba, opened in October 1975, which serves phosphate mines at El Hasa and Wadi El Abyad.

Hedjaz Jordan Railway (administered by the Ministry of Transport): POB 582, Amman; tel. 55413; telex 1236; f. 1902; length of track 326 km; Chair. Eng. A. AL-SUHEIMAT; Dir-Gen. M. R. QOSEINI.

This was formerly a section of the Hedjaz railway (Damascus to Medina) for Muslim pilgrims to Medina and Mecca. It crosses the Syrian border and enters Jordanian territory south of Dera'a, and runs for approximately 366 km to Naqb Ishtar, passing through Zarka, Amman, Qatrana and Ma'an. Some 844 km of the line, from Ma'an to Medina in Saudi Arabia, have been abandoned for the past sixty years. Reconstruction of the Medina line, begun in 1965, was scheduled to be completed in 1971 at a cost of £15m., divided equally between Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Syria. However, the reconstruction work has been suspended at the request of the Arab States concerned, pending further studies on costs. The line between Ma'an and Saudi Arabia (114 km) is now completed, as well as 15 km in Saudi Arabia as far as Halet Ammar Station. A new 115-km extension to Aqaba was financed by a JD12m. loan from the Federal Republic of Germany (see Aqaba Railway Corpn above). On 27 January 1980 an agreement was signed between the Supreme Commission of the Hedjaz Railway and Dorsch Consult (Federal Republic of Germany) for a feasibility study for construction of the Hedjaz Railway to high international specifications to connect Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Syria. The feasibility study was still awaiting a decision in 1984.

ROADS

Amman is linked by road with all parts of the kingdom and with neighbouring countries. All cities and most towns are connected by a two-lane paved road system. In addition, several thousand km of tracks make all villages accessible to motor transport. In 1981, the latest inventory showed the East Bank of Jordan to have 2,000 km of main roads, 820 km of secondary roads (both types asphalted) and 2,404 km of paved village roads. There are also 1,950 km of unsurfaced roads.

SHIPPING

The port of Aqaba is Jordan's only outlet to the sea and has two general berths of 340 m and 215 m, with seven main transit sheds, covered storage area of 4,150 sq m, an open area of 50,600 sq m and a phosphate berth 210 m long and 10 m deep. Ten new berths and storage facilities are being built, and a separate potash berth, a container terminal and a fertilizer jetty are planned.

T. Gargour & Fils: POB 419, Amman; tel. 22307; telex 21213; f. 1928; shipping agents and owners; Chair. JOHN GARGOUR.

PIPELINES

Two oil pipelines cross Jordan. The former Iraq Petroleum Company pipeline, carrying petroleum from the oilfields in Iraq to Haifa, has not operated since 1967. The 1,717-km (1,067-mile) pipeline, known as the Trans-Arabian Pipeline (Tapline), carries petroleum from the oilfields of Dhahran in Saudi Arabia to Sidon on the Mediterranean seaboard in Lebanon. Tapline traverses Jordan for a distance of 177 km (110 miles) and has frequently been cut by hostile action. Tapline stopped pumping to Syria and Lebanon at the end of 1983, when it was first due to close. It was later scheduled to close in 1985, but in September 1984 Jordan renewed an agreement to receive Saudi Arabian crude oil through Tapline. The agreement can be cancelled by either party at two years' notice. There are plans for a pipeline of about 1,600 km (1,000 miles) from Kirkuk, in Iraq, to the port of Aqaba, on the Red Sea, in Jordan.

CIVIL AVIATION

There are international airports at Amman and Aqaba. The new Queen Alia International Airport at Zizya, Amman, was opened in May 1983.

KAMPUCHEA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The People's Republic of Kampuchea, formerly called Cambodia, occupies part of the Indochinese peninsula in South-East Asia. It is bordered by Thailand and Laos to the north, by Viet-Nam to the east and by the Gulf of Thailand to the south. The climate is tropical and humid. There is a rainy season from June to November, with the heaviest rainfall in September. The temperature is generally between 20°C and 36°C (68°F to 97°F), and the annual average at Phnom-Penh is 27°C (81°F). The official language is Khmer, which is spoken by all except the Vietnamese and Chinese minorities. The principal religion is Theravada Buddhism. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is red, with a stylized representation (in yellow) of the temple of Angkor Wat, with five towers, in the centre. The capital is Phnom-Penh.

Recent History

Kampuchea, known as the Khmer Republic between 1970 and 1975, was formerly the Kingdom of Cambodia. It became a French protectorate in the 19th century and was incorporated in French Indo-China. In April 1941 Norodom Sihanouk, then aged 18, succeeded his grandfather as King. In May 1947 he promulgated a constitution which provided for a bicameral Parliament, including an elected National Assembly. Cambodia became an Associate State of the French Union in November 1949 and fully independent on 9 November 1953. In order to become a political leader, King Sihanouk abdicated in March 1955 in favour of his father, Norodom Suramarit. Prince Sihanouk, as he became, founded a mass movement, the Sangkum Reastr Niyum (Popular Socialist Community), which won all the seats in Assembly elections in 1955, 1958, 1962 and 1966. King Suramarit died in April 1960, and Parliament elected Prince Sihanouk to become Head of State (without taking the title of King) in June 1960.

Prince Sihanouk's Government developed good relations with the People's Republic of China and with North Viet-Nam, while being highly critical of the USA's role in Asia. From 1964, however, the Government was faced with a pro-Communist insurgency movement, the Khmer Rouge, which was joined in 1967 by left-wing elements from the Sangkum. Also, it became increasingly difficult to isolate Cambodia from the war in Viet-Nam.

In March 1970 Prince Sihanouk was deposed by a right-wing coup, led by the Prime Minister, Lt-Gen. (later Marshal) Lon Nol. The new Government pledged itself to the removal of foreign Communist forces and appealed to the USA for military aid. Sihanouk went into exile and formed the Royal Government of National Union of Cambodia (GRUNC), supported by the Khmer Rouge. Sihanoukists and the Khmer Rouge formed the National United Front of Cambodia (FUNC). Their combined forces, aided by South Viet-Nam's National Liberation Front and North Vietnamese troops, posed a serious threat to the new regime but in October 1970 Marshal Lon Nol proclaimed the Khmer Republic. In June 1972 he was elected the first President.

During 1973 an increasing number of foreign states recognized GRUNC as the rightful government of Cambodia. In 1974 the republican regime's control was limited to a few urban enclaves, besieged by GRUNC forces, mainly Khmer Rouge, to whom Phnom-Penh fell on 17 April 1975. Prince Sihanouk became Head of State again but did not return from exile until September. In the wake of the Khmer Rouge victory, the country was subjected to a pre-arranged programme of radical social change. The towns were largely evacuated, and their inhabitants put to work in rural areas. Many hundreds of thousands (possibly 1m. or more) died from cruelty, hunger and disease.

A new constitution, promulgated in January 1976, renamed the country Democratic Kampuchea, and established a republican form of government with a 250-member People's Representative Assembly. Elections for the Assembly were held in March 1976, and in April Prince Sihanouk resigned as Head of State and GRUNC was dissolved. The Assembly elected Khieu Samphan, formerly Deputy Prime Minister, to be President of the State Presidium (Head of State). The little-known Pol Pot became Prime Minister. In September 1977 it was officially disclosed that the ruling organization was the Communist Party of Kampuchea (CPK), with Pol Pot as the Secretary of its Central Committee.

After 1975 close links with the People's Republic of China developed, while relations with Viet-Nam deteriorated markedly. In 1978 the Vietnamese army launched a series of attacks into Kampuchean territory. The Pol Pot Government accused Hanoi of trying to overthrow it. In December the establishment of the Kampuchean National United Front for National Salvation (KNUFNS, renamed Kampuchean United Front for National Construction and Defence, KUFNCD, in December 1981), a Communist-led movement opposed to Pol Pot and supported by Viet-Nam, was announced. Later in the month, Viet-Nam invaded Kampuchea, supported by the KNUFNS.

On 7 January 1979 Phnom-Penh fell to Vietnamese forces, and three days later the People's Republic of Kampuchea was proclaimed. A People's Revolutionary Council, with Heng Samrin, leader of the KNUFNS, as President, took control and pledged to restore freedom of movement, of association and of religion, and to restore the family unit. The CPK was replaced as the governing party by the Kampuchean People's Revolutionary Party (KPRP). Resistance to the new regime continued throughout 1979 and several groups opposing both the Khmer Rouge and the Heng Samrin regime were established, including the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF), headed by a former Prime Minister, Son Sann.

In July 1979, claiming that Pol Pot's regime had been responsible for 3m. deaths, the KNUFNS administration sentenced Pol Pot and his former Minister of Foreign Affairs, Ieng Sary, to death in absentia. In January 1980 Khieu Samphan took over the premiership of the Khmer Rouge regime, while Pol Pot became Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces.

Throughout 1979 starvation and disease were prevalent. Relief agencies administered aid programmes, but were greatly hampered by international disputes. Relations between Thailand and Viet-Nam worsened when, in June 1980, Thailand announced a voluntary repatriation scheme for Khmer refugees in border camps, a move which was interpreted as a means of returning Khmer Rouge soldiers to disrupt the Heng Samrin administration. In December 1981 Pen Sovan was replaced as General Secretary of the ruling KPRP by Heng Samrin, officially owing to the former's ill health. In December 1984 Chan Si, Chairman of the Council of Ministers, died in the USSR, and Hun Sen, a Vice-Chairman and Minister of Foreign Affairs, became Chairman.

After long negotiations between anti-Vietnamese resistance groups, an agreement was reached in June 1982 to form a coalition government-in-exile, with the aim of securing the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea. Prince Sihanouk, the former Head of State, became President, Khieu Samphan (Khmer Rouge) Vice-President and Son Sann (KPNLF) Prime Minister. The coalition has the support of ASEAN and several other countries.

The united armed forces of Democratic Kampuchea have continued to resist Vietnamese troops. Viet-Nam has launched regular major offensives on the Thai-Kampuchean border during the annual dry season between December and April, capturing guerrilla bases and bombing civilian refugee camps. The fighting in 1984/85 was particularly heavy, and caused the flight of thousands of refugees from border camps into Thailand seeking safety from the battles. In December 1984 more than 130,000 refugees fled to Thailand, including some 23,000 from Ampil, the headquarters of the KPNLF, fearing a major attack by the Vietnamese. In January 1985, following very heavy shelling and casualties on both sides, Vietnamese troops overran the base and took control of it. Troops subsequently gained control over most of the rebel-held area along the Thai border. The guerrillas, however, have continued to harass the Vietnamese.

Since 1982 Viet-Nam has carried out annual mid-year public withdrawals of some 10,000 troops from Kampuchea, but they are regarded by many as simply a rotation of troops, and are believed to have made no significant difference to the strength of the Vietnamese forces.

During 1984 there were signs that Viet-Nam had become more amenable to the prospect of unconditional discussions with ASEAN and the Indo-Chinese countries, concerning the stalemate in Kampuchea, and would accept Japan as neutral mediator. Japan's Minister of Foreign Affairs, Shintaro Abe, announced in October that Japan would be willing to provide aid to Kampuchea once peace is restored there. However, some sources remain sceptical about Viet-Nam's proposals, and consider that any negotiations will not take place for some time. Most countries, including Sweden, Japan, Australia, France and the Netherlands, continue to give humanitarian aid only to Kampucheans, sent via the UN and the International Red Cross for refugees. In 1984 the USA contributed more than US $14m. in aid. The stumbling block for any progress in Kampuchea remains the presence of Pol Pot and the possibility that the Khmer Rouge would again be a ruling force in Kampuchea.

The involvement of Viet-Nam in the overthrow of the Pol Pot regime has been widely condemned. In October 1984, for the sixth consecutive year, the UN General Assembly adopted resolutions which called for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Kampuchea and reiterated recognition of the anti-Vietnamese regime. Democratic Kampuchea continues to occupy the Kampuchean seat in the UN General Assembly.

Government

Legislative power is vested in the National Assembly, with 117 members elected for five years by universal adult suffrage. The Assembly elects the Council of State from among its members. Executive power is exercised by the Council of Ministers, which is appointed by, and responsible to, the National Assembly. Local administration is carried out by Local People's Committees.

Defence

The total strength of Kampuchea's armed forces was estimated to be 30,000 in July 1984. Conscription into military service is in force, for a minimum of 18 months. There are also some 22 divisions of Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea, numbering about 180,000 men. The total strength of the armed forces of the coalition government of Democratic Kampuchea is unknown, but it is believed that the Khmer Rouge has between 30,000 and 40,000 men, the KPNLF 10,000 to 12,000, and Prince Sihanouk about 5,000 armed supporters.

Economic Affairs

The essentially agricultural economy was totally disrupted by the war between 1970 and 1975, and further affected by political events following the Vietnamese invasion of December 1978. After April 1975 a vigorous agricultural programme was put into effect to overcome severe food shortages. The overcrowded urban areas were cleared of their inhabitants, who were driven into the countryside to work on the land and in other tasks of economic reconstruction. All sectors of the economy were nationalized, and agriculture collectivized. The Pol Pot Government's chief aim was the production of as much rice, other strategic crops and livestock as possible. However, food shortages continued, and currency dealings largely ceased.

Under normal conditions, Kampuchea's main exportable commodities are rice, rubber and black pepper. Before 1970 rice was Kampuchea's principal export but by 1974 the country was a net importer of rice. In 1976/77 there was a small exportable surplus of 150,000–200,000 tons, and it was hoped that Kampuchea might soon achieve self-suffiency in food. However, adverse weather and shortages of labour and fertilizers have restricted progress, and Kampuchea continues to import rice. In 1981/82 production was 1.4m. tons, with a deficit of 278,200 tons, and in 1982/83, when official production was 1.7m. tons, the FAO estimated a shortfall of nearly 300,000 tons. In 1983/84 there were serious droughts and flooding, which affected the harvest, and a shortfall of 177,000 tons of rice was predicted, with a total output of 1.6m. tons. The area of rice under cultivation is thought to have fallen from 4m. ha in 1970 to 1.3m. ha in 1982/83, and about 10% is irrigated. Rubber production also fell, with only 9,200 metric tons produced in 1982, compared with 27,500 tons in 1974. The fishing programme has met with the most success; landings increased fourfold between 1979 and 1982. In 1981/82 the total catch was 68,700 metric tons, and in 1983 an estimated 63,000 tons.

FAO estimates indicate that the total production of most-major crops (rice, maize, sweet potatoes, cassava, dry beans), after rising slightly between 1975 and 1978, fell between 1979 and 1981, but began to recover in 1982. Since 1980 further famine has been avoided with the help of international aid, from the UN and the Soviet bloc, and significant progress has been made towards stemming famine and malnutrition. Despite this, food shortages remain a problem. The Government has reported strong growth in the development of the buffalo and cattle herds and the pig population.

The country's infrastructure and industry have been completely disrupted. By 1984 59 factories were reported to be back in operation, of which about 50% were engaged in rice processing. An import-export enterprise had been established to deal with internal and external trade and foreign aid. Imports in 1977 were estimated at US $22m., and exports at $3m.

Kampuchea has limited mineral resources, including phosphates, iron ore, gem stones, bauxite, silicon and manganese ore, of which only phosphates are at present being exploited. Forests are an important economic asset but remain unexploited. Development is hampered by a lack of technical experts and mechanization, and by an inadequate road network. In 1982 log production was officially put at 67,700 cu m.

The KUFNCD administration aims to restore the national economy, primarily by reviving agricultural production. The establishment of a national bank was announced in November 1979, and money was reintroduced in March 1980.

Transport and Communications

Much of Kampuchea's transport and communications system was destroyed or disrupted during the years of conflict. By November 1979 the railway linking Phnom-Penh and Kompong-Som, with 260 km (160 miles) of track, had been restored. Kompong-Som is the main port. There is an international airport near Phnom-Penh. A service operated by Air Kampuchea flies to Ho Chi Minh City in Viet-Nam.

Social Welfare

In 1984 there were 22 hospitals in Kampuchea, with 400 doctors and public health officers under the Ministry of Health. There were also 1,320 commune infirmaries and 108 medical posts, with a total staff of 12,971.

Education

The KUFNCD regime is attempting to re-establish a full educational system. The school system lasts for 10 years, with an emphasis on practical subjects such as agriculture. During the academic year 1979/80 there were about 1,300 primary schools, and more than 12,000 teachers were recruited. In 1982/83 there was a total enrolment of an estimated 1.69m. students, of whom 1.6m. were primary school pupils and 80,000 secondary school pupils. There were also about 43,000 teachers. More schools and universities are planned. In 1980 the faculty of medicine of Phnom-Penh University and the teacher-training college were reopened. More than 2,000 students were reportedly sent abroad for further education.

Directory

The Constitution

A new Constitution was approved by the National Assembly on 27 June 1981. It consists of a Preamble and 10 Chapters, divided into 93 Articles. The main provisions of the Constitution are summarized below:

POLITICAL SYSTEM

The People's Republic of Kampuchea is an independent sovereign state, gradually advancing towards socialism.

ECONOMIC SYSTEM

The national economy is under the direction of the state, and comprises three sectors: the state-run, the collective and the family-run economy. Foreign trade is the monopoly of the state.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The National Assembly is the supreme organ of state power and the sole legislative organ. Its deputies are elected by the principle of universal secret ballot and its term of office is five years. It has the power to adopt and revise the constitution and laws, to control their implementation, to adopt economic policies and the state budget, to elect or remove the Chairman, Vice-Chairman or Secretary from the National Assembly, the Council of State and the Council of Ministers, to control the activities of the Council of State and the Council of Ministers.

COUNCIL OF STATE

The Council of State is the representative organ of the country and a standing organ of the National Assembly. Its members are elected from the National Assembly deputies. The Chairman of the Council of State is Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and Chairman of the National Defence Council, to be set up when necessary. Its duties include promulgating laws, deciding on the appointment or removal of members of the Council of Ministers, creating and abolishing ministries, ratifying or rejecting international treaties except when it is deemed necessary to refer them to the National Assembly.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

The Council of Ministers are the government and organ of direct management of society, responsible to the National Assembly.

LOCAL PEOPLE'S COMMITTEES

The territory of Kampuchea is divided into provinces and municipalities, under the direct administration of central authority. People's committees are established in all provinces, municipalities, districts, communes and wards, and are responsible for local administration, public security and social order.

JUDICIARY AND COURTS

The judicial organs of Kampuchea are the people's courts and military tribunals.

RAILWAYS

Chemins de Fer du Cambodge: Moha Vithei Pracheathippatay, Phnom-Penh; tel. 25156. Before April 1975 the total length of railway track was 1,370 km. Lines linked Phnom-Penh with the Thai border via Battambang and with Kompong-Som. A new line between Samrong Station and Kompong Speu was under construction in 1978. By November 1979 the 260-km Phnom-Penh–Kompong-Som line, and by February 1980 the Phnom-Penh–Battambang line, had been restored.

ROADS

Before 1975 there were nearly 11,000 km of motorable roads and tracks, of which about 2,000 km were asphalted. In 1981 a newly-repaired section of the National Highway One, which runs from the Vietnamese border to Phnom-Penh, was formally opened.

INLAND WATERWAYS

The major routes are along the Mekong River, and up the Tonlé Sap River into the Tonlé Sap (Great Lake), covering in all about 1,400 km. The inland ports of Neak Luong, Kompong Cham and Prek Kdam have been supplied with motor ferries and the ferry crossings have been improved.

SHIPPING

The main port is Kompong-Som, on the Gulf of Thailand, which can handle vessels up to 10,000 tons; the total number of berths was raised to 10 in 1970. Phnom-Penh port, currently undergoing reconstruction, lies some distance inland. Steamers of up to 4,000 tons can be accommodated.

CIVIL AVIATION

There is an international airport at Pochentong, near Phnom-Penh.

Air Kampuchea: Phnom-Penh; f. 1982; service consists of one route, from Phnom-Penh to Ho Chi Minh City in Viet-Nam; fleet: 1 Antonov-24.

KENYA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Kenya lies astride the equator on the east coast of Africa, with Somalia to the north-east, Ethiopia and Sudan to the north, Uganda to the west and Tanzania to the south. The climate varies with altitude: the coastal region is hot and humid, with temperatures averaging between 20°C and 32°C (69°–90°F), while inland, at more than 1,500 metres (5,000 ft) above sea-level, temperatures average 7°–27°C (45°–80°F). The highlands and western areas receive ample rainfall but most of northern Kenya is very dry. Kiswahili is the official language, while English, Kikuyu and Luo are also widely spoken. Most of the country's inhabitants follow traditional beliefs. About 25% are Christians, and about 6% Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three broad horizontal stripes, of black, red and green, separated by two narrow white stripes. Superimposed in the centre is a red shield, with black and white markings, upon crossed white spears. The capital is Nairobi.

Recent History

A former British colony and protectorate, Kenya was granted internal self-government in June 1963, became independent on 12 December 1963, and a republic exactly one year later. Jomo Kenyatta, the leader of the Kenya African National Union (KANU), became Prime Minister in June 1963 and led Kenya to independence, becoming its first President in December 1964. Through the dominance of KANU, which was the only party contesting elections to the National Assembly in 1969 and 1974, Kenyatta established stability in Kenya and won great personal prestige at home and abroad. However, the assassination in 1969 of Tom Mboya, the Minister for Economic Planning and Development and Secretary-General of KANU, led to civil unrest and the banning of the opposition Kenya People's Union. Another political crisis was caused by an unsuccessful revolutionary plot in 1971. Political discontent was heightened by the assassination in March 1975 of an outspoken politician, J. M. Kariuki, and the later detention of unofficial opposition figures in the National Assembly. In 1976 a Kikuyu-backed constitutional proposal to debar the succession of the Vice-President, Daniel arap Moi (a member of the minority Kalenjin tribe), was thwarted by the Attorney-General, Charles Njonjo, backed by Kenyatta.

Following the death of President Kenyatta in August 1978, Moi was sworn in as acting President. He was proclaimed President in October, having received endorsement from KANU, and was the only candidate in the presidential election of November 1979. In 1981 an attempt by former Vice-President Oginga Odinga to be re-elected to the National Assembly was barred by KANU. After criticizing government policy, and talking of forming a socialist party, Odinga was expelled from KANU in May 1982 and placed under house arrest in November. He was freed from this restriction in October 1983.

Meanwhile, in June 1982 the National Assembly officially declared Kenya a one-party state. A series of political detentions and increasing press censorship were followed by an attempted coup on 1 August, which was suppressed only at the cost of several hundred deaths and injuries. The Kenya Air Force and the University of Nairobi were identified as the major sources of dissent, and both were dissolved. The University was officially reopened in October 1983, and the Air Force was reinstated in December under the name of the 82 Air Force.

However, the coup attempt undermined Kenya's stability, and in May 1983 President Moi accused an unnamed foreign power of grooming a Kenyan politician to take over the presidency. Shortly afterwards, he called an early general election for September, 14 months ahead of schedule. In the furore that followed the accusation of foreign interference, allegations of disloyalty were made against Charles Njonjo, then Minister for Constitutional Affairs. He was subsequently suspended from both the Cabinet and KANU, and resigned his seat in the National Assembly in June. A judicial inquiry into the allegations against him opened in October, but was adjourned until January 1984. The inquiry was then resumed, and continued to hear evidence concerning the allegations against Njonjo until August 1984, when it was closed. The commission of inquiry drafted a report of its findings, which was submitted to the President in late 1984, and which reportedly upheld most of the allegations against Njonjo. He was, however, 'pardoned' by Moi in December.

In the general election of September 1983, only about 48% of the electorate voted, the lowest turn-out since independence, and several Cabinet Ministers lost their seats. Moi was unopposed as the candidate for the presidency, and was returned to office for a second term. Since the elections, Kenya has returned to comparative stability, although some unrest was caused early in 1984 by persistent violence in the north-eastern area of Wajir, involving the ethnic Somali tribes, the Degodia and the Ajuran. Leaders of the Degodia tribe claimed that government security forces, sent to intervene in the troubles in February 1984, had killed up to 900 people, but these allegations were denied by the Minister of State in charge of security, who stated that only 57 people had died. During 1984 President Moi attempted to reduce corruption and to increase discipline within both KANU and the civil service. In September, 15 members of KANU, including Njonjo, were expelled from the party, and Moi directed that all civil servants must in future be members of KANU. In October a census of Kenya's civil servants was conducted in a bid to purge the sector of bogus officials, and this was followed in November by a major reshuffle within the civil service.

After having poor relations with most of its East African neighbours for some years, Kenya's position has improved since 1981, encouraged by Moi's chairmanship of the OAU, a position which he held between June 1981 and June 1983. The border with Tanzania, which was closed prior to the dissolution of the East African Community (EAC) in 1977, was reopened in November 1983, following successful negotiations between representatives of the three former EAC members, Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda, resulting in an agreement on the distribution of EAC assets and liabilities between the three countries. In the same month, the Kenyans who were involved in the August 1982 coup plot, and had previously been granted political asylum by Tanzania, were returned to Kenya, where the alleged leaders of the coup attempt were subsequently sentenced to death. However, no death sentences had been carried out by July 1984. In December 1983 Kenya and Tanzania agreed to establish full diplomatic relations for the first time. Kenya has maintained friendly relations with Ethiopia through common fear of Somalia's expansionist intentions. However, Kenya's relations with Somalia have become more cordial since 1981, encouraged by the USA, which has military bases in both countries. In July 1984 President Moi paid an official visit to Somalia, and the two countries subsequently agreed to promote greater mutual economic and cultural co-operation.

Government

Legislative power is vested in the unicameral National Assembly, with 172 members (158 elected by universal adult suffrage, the Attorney-General, the Speaker and 12 members nominated by the President) who serve a term of five years, subject to dissolution. Executive power is held by the President, also directly elected for five years. He is assisted by an appointed Vice-President and Cabinet. Kenya was a de facto one-party state between 1969 and June 1982, when it became a de jure one-party state. The KANU party elections, which, according to the party's constitution, should be held every two years, were last held in 1980. They were postponed for the second time in 1984, allegedly because of the severe drought afflicting the country.

Defence

Of a total armed force of 16,000 in July 1984, the army numbered 13,000, the navy 650 and the air force 2,350. The air force was disbanded in August 1982 but was re-formed in 1983. Military service is voluntary. There is a paramilitary force of 1,800 police. The estimated defence expenditure for 1982/83 was Ks. 2,900m. Kenya receives military assistance from the United Kingdom, and from the USA, whose Rapid Deployment Force uses port and onshore facilities in Kenya.

Economic Affairs

Kenya's prosperity rests largely on the production and processing of agricultural and pastoral products, and about 85% of the population rely on agriculture for their livelihood. In 1980 and 1981 the agricultural sector accounted for 33% of Kenya's gross domestic product (GDP), and agriculture normally accounts for about 65% of foreign exchange earnings. Agricultural output grew in real terms by 4.4% in 1982, and by 4.1% in 1983, but this rate was unlikely to be sustained in 1984/85, because of crop failure caused by severe drought in 1984. Farming is often adversely affected by climatic conditions. The principal cash crops are coffee and tea (of which Kenya is Africa's leading producer), which together brought in 45% of foreign exchange earnings in 1983. Kenya's production of made tea was 96,033 metric tons in 1982, and increased by 25% in 1983, reaching a record 119,738 tons, valued at Ks. 2,400m. However, output was expected to fall by about 10% in 1984, because of the drought. Coffee production in 1983/84 also reached record levels, with output estimated at 120,000–125,000 tons, representing a 45% increase over the 1982 crop. Coffee was also expected to be affected by the drought in 1984/85, with output likely to fall by up to 60%. Kenya produced 50,000 tons of sisal in 1983; pyrethrum, pineapples and wattle are also produced, and exports of Kenyan tobacco began for the first time in 1983. The maize crop of about 1.8m. metric tons in 1980 had to be supplemented by imports of 350,000 tons but recovered to 2.3m. tons in 1981. Production was 2.2m. tons in 1983, but severe drought was expected to reduce this to 1m.–1.5m. tons in 1984. In that year the total cereal harvest was expected to be 50% short of domestic food requirements; the Government launched a National Famine Relief Fund, and appealed to the international community for 1.5m. tons of maize and wheat in food aid. Production of milk improved in 1982. The annual milk production rate was estimated to be just over 1,000m. litres in 1983, and output is expected to increase to 2,260m. litres per year by 1988. The Tana delta irrigation scheme, begun in 1981, should eventually enable Kenya to produce more than 70,000 tons of rice per year, enough to meet domestic needs and to provide a surplus. Livestock farming varies from the traditional herding of the Masai tribes to the pedigree stock-raising of dairy and beef cattle on the Highland farms. Kenya is one of the few African countries with an important dairy industry. Since 1961 much of the land which was formerly used by Europeans for large-scale mixed farms has been transferred to Africans under a variety of settlement schemes, usually after extensive subdivision.

Manufacturing accounted for about 13% of GDP in 1981. This sector has been limited in recent years by import restrictions, and grew by only 2.7% in real terms in 1982. However, this rate improved to 4.5% in 1983, owing to the increased availability of foreign exchange and to a reduction of some import duties. Kenya's status as a good investment risk, by African standards, was damaged by political instability in 1982. The economy has not suffered as much as had been expected after the collapse of the East African Community (EAC) in 1977. Trade with Kenya's EAC partners, Tanzania and Uganda, declined after the collapse, but has been gradually reviving, following the November 1983 agreement on distributing EAC assets and liabilities between the three countries. The reopening of Kenya's border with Tanzania in 1983 also improved trade prospects, and the two countries were expected to sign a formal bilateral trade agreement at the end of 1984. The establishment of the Preferential Trade Area (PTA), in which Kenya is included, was also expected to provide new export markets.

The cost of Kenya's imports of crude petroleum was equal to 57% of total non-oil export earnings in 1981, and in 1984 it was estimated that imports of crude petroleum absorbed 40% of foreign exchange earnings. A US $4m. project has been launched to revive interest in the exploration of oil and gas reserves, and many ambitious hydroelectric and geothermal projects are under way in an attempt to make Kenya self-sufficient in electricity. Work on extending the Olkaria geothermal power station is expected to be completed in 1985, and this will increase the station's total generating capacity to 45 MW. This is expected to reduce Kenya's annual petroleum imports by about 70,000 metric tons.

Kenya's most important mineral is soda ash, exports of which earned K£14m. in 1983. Other minerals include salt, gold and limestone. Mineral production is relatively slight but is likely to increase considerably with the discovery of 2m. tons of lead-silver ore at Kinangoni, and the exploitation of a fluorspar ore deposit in the Kerio valley. A major geological survey is under way.

The high rate of economic growth which Kenya achieved in the decade after independence, generating a 27% increase in GDP per head and a 50% rise in smallholders' farm production, has not been maintained. In 1979 a fourth development plan, for 1979–83, was launched with a target annual GDP growth rate of 6.3% and estimated total expenditure of K£4,000m. In 1980 the target was lowered to 5.4%, but even this proved difficult to achieve. After reaching 7.8% in 1977, the GDP growth rate fell to 4% in 1981 and to 3.4% in 1982. The growth rate in 1983 was 3.9%, and the fifth five-year development plan, launched in December 1983, aimed to achieve a similar rate of growth in 1984, with GDP projected to expand by an average annual rate of 4.9%, and the growth rate forecast to rise to 5.6% in 1988, the last year covered by the plan. However, these targets seemed unlikely to be met following the drought in 1984. The fifth plan is aimed at the development of existing domestic resources, and no elaborate new projects are expected to be launched in the period 1984–88.

The GDP figures reflect the importance to the Kenyan economy of coffee and tea, which have suffered adverse production conditions and price fluctuations since the boom of 1977, although the situation improved in 1983/84. Problems of unemployment, exacerbated by an annual rate of population increase of about 4% (the highest in the world), a high inflation rate (some 22% in 1982) and unequal distribution of wealth, remain largely unsolved. Increases in the price of crude petroleum have added to Kenya's problems. The current balance of payments worsened from a surplus of K£112m. in 1977 to a deficit of K£334m. in 1981. Between 1979 and 1982, increasingly strict import controls were introduced in an attempt to reduce the current deficit, but this resulted in lower GDP growth, and the 1983/84 budget reduced import duties of over 30% on raw materials by an average of 14.7%. The Kenya shilling was devalued twice in 1981 (by 4.8% in February and by a further 15.1% in September), and again in December 1982, by 15%, in an attempt to reduce the trade deficit and to meet the terms required by the IMF for continued assistance. In March 1983 the IMF approved an 18-month stand-by facility of SDR 175.95m. An economic recovery appeared to be in prospect towards the end of 1983, when inflation fell to about 14.6%, and the current deficit on the balance of payments was reduced to about K£116m., partly as a result of a grant of $30m. from the USA. However, prospects for a sustained recovery were reduced in 1984 by the prolonged drought, the effects of which were likely to continue during 1985.

Transport and Communications

There are international airports at Nairobi and Mombasa, as well as smaller aerodromes in Kisumu and Malindi; Wilson airport in Nairobi, which handles charter flights and provides flying services; and about 166 airstrips. Main roads link the principal towns, and there is a country-wide bus service. A major road between Nairobi and Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, was completed in 1977, and projects are under way to build roads between Kitale and Juba, and between Kakuma and Lokichogio, thus connecting Kenya and Sudan. In April 1983 the Government launched a programme, costing Ks. 300m., to upgrade 1,500 km of road in the Rift Valley and parts of Central province, and in August the African Development Bank agreed to loan Kenya about Ks. 486m. to finance the improvement of road communications. In 1984 the World Bank agreed to loan Kenya $50m. towards financing the rehabilitation of roads over a four-year period. Mombasa is a fully-equipped international seaport, with 16 deep-water berths, and is being further extended at a cost of Ks. 717m. It serves Uganda and Ethiopia as well as Kenya. There are plans to rehabilitate and reorganize the railway system.

Social Welfare

There are state schemes for the provision of pensions and welfare benefits, and a National Social Security Fund has been set up. The Government runs hospitals and medical services; no fees are charged to out-patients, and there is free in-patient treatment for children. Free attention is also given in cases of need. Missions, private charities and commercial firms provide further facilities. A National Council of Social Services co-ordinates the work of voluntary agencies. In 1984 Kenya had 216 hospitals, 208 health centres and 1,213 health sub-centres and dispensaries, with a total of 29,294 hospital beds. There were an estimated 2,057 physicians working in Kenya. In January 1983 Japan agreed to grant Kenya Ks. 120m. to assist in financing the construction of a medical research institute in Nairobi. Work on the first phase of the project was completed in 1984. In 1983 Saudi Arabia granted Kenya Ks. 28m. for the construction of a hospital on Lamu island, and Sweden granted aid, amounting to Ks. 184m., for health and social welfare projects. The Government is engaged in numerous health development programmes, which include the construction of new health centres, and the expansion of out-patient departments in hospitals. However, the family planning programme, launched in 1974, has been of very limited success. The allocation for health in the 1984/85 budget was Ks 1,260m.

Education

Education is not compulsory. The Government provides, or assists in the provision of, schools. Primary education begins at five years of age and lasts for seven years. Secondary education from the age of 12, lasts for six years: a first cycle of four years and a second of two years. The total enrolment at primary schools increased from 900,000 in 1963 to about 4.3 million in 1983. In January 1980 remaining fees were abolished and the goal of free primary education was reached. In 1978 about 66% of children in the relevant age-group attended primary schools, but secondary enrolment was equivalent to only 18%. Education is multi-racial at all levels but is hampered by a lack of qualified teachers. There are also considerable inequalities: in 1977 an estimated 72% of school-age children in Nairobi attended school, compared with only 4% in North-East Province. In 1982 adult literacy averaged 61% for males and 38% for females, and overall adult literacy rose from about 46% in 1976 to 48% in 1983. The University of Nairobi, which has about 9,000 students, has frequently been closed because of student unrest. It was dissolved following the August 1982 coup attempt, and reopened in October 1983. Plans to build a second university, at a projected cost of US $159.8m., at Eldoret, in Rift Valley province, are well advanced but the university is not expected to be completed until 1989. The education sector was to receive the highest financial allocation (Ks. 4,360m.) in the 1984/85 budget.

Tourism

Kenya's attractions as a tourist centre are mainly its wildlife, Indian Ocean coast and good all-year-round climate. There are 15 National Parks and 23 game reserves open to the public, several of which provide overnight accommodation. The hunting of game was banned in 1977 to prevent further destruction of Kenya's natural heritage, but bird shooting recommenced in 1984, and the Government has plans for the reintroduction of game hunting as part of a controlled culling programme, and with a view to attracting more tourists.

Tourism was the country's second largest earner of foreign exchange in 1982, accounting for 20% of Kenya's foreign exchange receipts. Several hotels and game lodges are being expanded or are under construction, and more overseas tourist offices have been opened. In 1982 there were 362,400 visitors to Kenya, and receipts totalled K£118m. The number of tourists was 339,000 in 1983, when revenue from tourism totalled K£122m. Tourism has suffered recently from the effects of global recession, and received a further setback when the country lost its reputation for political stability in 1982. However, in 1984 the Government embarked on an ambitious tourism incentive and promotion strategy, aimed at increasing the number of visitors to Kenya to 1m. per year by 1989. The Kenya Tourism Marketing Board was inaugurated in April 1984 to further the development of new external tourism markets. The prospects for the industry should also improve following the reopening of the border with Tanzania in November 1983, and the agreement of measures to allow tourists and traffic across the border. It was forecast that a total of about 500,000 tourists would visit Kenya in 1984, and projected revenue from tourism for that year was estimated at Ks. 5,000m.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 1 June (Madaraka Day, anniversary of self-government), 20 June (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 27 August (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), 20 October (Kenyatta Day), 12 December (Independence Day), 25–26 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 28–31 March (Easter).

The Constitution

Kenya's Constitution was introduced at independence on 12 December 1963. It has been amended several times. Previous amendments to the 1963 Constitution were consolidated by the Constitution of Kenya Act in 1969.

The Republic of Kenya was a de facto one-party state between 1969 and June 1982, when it became a de jure one-party state, and is governed by a united central government. The central legislative authority is the National Assembly, consisting of a single house. There are 158 elected Representatives, 12 members nominated by the President and two ex officio members, the Attorney-General and the Speaker. All candidates for elected seats must be nominated by the Kenya African National Union. The maximum life of the National Assembly is five years from its first meeting (except in wartime). It can be dissolved by the President at any time and the National Assembly may force its own dissolution by a vote of 'no-confidence', whereupon Presidential and Assembly elections have to be held within 90 days.

Executive power is in the hands of the President, Vice-President and Cabinet. Both the Vice-President and the Cabinet are appointed by the President, who must be a member of the Assembly and at least 35 years of age. Election of the President is by direct popular vote. If a President dies, or a vacancy otherwise occurs during a President's period of office, the Vice-President becomes interim President for up to 90 days while a successor is elected.

The Constitution can be amended by the affirmative vote on Second and Third Reading of 65% of the membership of the National Assembly (excluding the Speaker and Attorney-General). Constitutional amendments can be passed in a single day provided there are separate sittings of the National Assembly.

Under the terms of the Constitution, individual rights and liberties are protected, including freedom of expression and assembly, privacy of the home, the right not to be detained without cause, and the right of compensation for the compulsory purchase of property.

Legislature

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The unicameral National Assembly has 158 elected members, and 12 members nominated by the President. There are two ex officio members of the National Assembly, the Attorney-General, without the right of vote, and the Speaker who has a casting vote. The most recent general election was held on 26 September 1983. Five members were returned unopposed, but the remaining 153 seats were contested. Only members of KANU were eligible to stand as candidates.

Speaker: F. M. G. Mati.

Political Organization

Kenya African National Union (KANU): POB 72394, Nairobi; f. 1960; a nation-wide African party which led the country to self-government and independence; became the sole legal party in June 1982; Pres. Daniel arap Moi; Vice-Pres. Mwai Kibaki; Chair. Isaac Omolo Okero; Sec.-Gen. Robert Matano.

The party elections, which should be held every two years, were last held in 1980, and were postponed for the second time in 1984.

Registrar: A. Rauf.

The High Court of Kenya: Nairobi; has unlimited criminal and civil jurisdiction at first instance, and sits as a court of appeal from subordinate courts in both criminal and civil cases. The High Court is a court of admiralty. There are two resident puisne judges at Mombasa, and a resident puisne judge at Nakuru, Eldoret, Kakamega, Kisumu and Nyeri. Regular sessions in Kisii and Meru.

LOWER COURTS

Resident Magistrates' Courts: have country-wide jurisdiction, with powers of punishment by imprisonment up to five years or by fine up to K£500. If presided over by a chief magistrate or senior resident magistrate the court is empowered to pass any sentence authorized by law. For certain offences, a resident magistrate may pass minimum sentences authorized by law.

District Magistrates' Courts: of first, second and third class; have jurisdiction within districts and powers of punishment by imprisonment for up to five years, one year and six months respectively, or by fines of up to K£500, K£100 and K£50 respectively.

Kadhi's Courts: have jurisdiction within districts, to determine questions of Islamic law.

Religion

African religions, beliefs and forms of worship show great variety both between races and tribes and from one district to another. The Arab community is Muslim, and Indians are partly Muslim and partly Hindu, and the Europeans and Goans are almost entirely Christian.

Muslims are found mainly along the coastline but the Islamic faith has also established itself among Africans around Nairobi and other towns up-country and among some tribes of the northern districts.

Christian missions are active and about 25% of Africans are Christian. East Africa is also an important centre for the Bahá'í faith.

ROADS

In July 1983 there were 54,836.5 km of classified roads and about 96,000 km of unclassified roads. The classified system is made up of 6,973 km of bitumen roads, and 47,863.5 km of gravel and earth roads. In 1976 a gravelling, bridging and culverting programme was started to gravel an estimated 10,000 km of secondary and minor roads, of which about 3,620 km had been improved by 1984. In 1976 a rural access roads programme was started in 22 districts in the country with the aim of constructing an estimated 14,000 km of roads. By June 1984 7,444 km had been constructed and 4,053 km had been gravelled under this programme. There is an all-weather road joining Nairobi and Addis Ababa, in Ethiopia, and a major highway between Kitale, in Kenya, and Juba, in Sudan, is under construction.

KIRIBATI

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Kiribati comprises 33 atolls, in three principal groups, scattered within an area of about 5m. sq km (2m. sq miles) in the mid-Pacific Ocean. The country extends about 3,870 km (2,400 miles) from east to west and about 2,050 km (1,275 miles) from north to south. Its nearest neighbours are Nauru, to the west, and Tuvalu and Tokelau, to the south. The climate is equatorial or tropical, with daytime temperatures varying between 26°C (79°F) and 32°C (90°F). There is a season of north-westerly trade winds from March to October and a season of rains and gales from October to March. Average annual rainfall, however, varies greatly from 3,000 mm (118 inches) in the northern islands to 1,500 mm (59 inches) at Tarawa and 700 mm (28 inches) in the Line Islands. Droughts occur in the central and southern islands. The principal languages are I-Kiribati (Gilbertese) and English, and the islands' inhabitants are mostly Christians. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) depicts a golden frigate bird in flight, on a red background, above a rising sun and alternating wavy lines of blue and white, representing the sea. The capital is on Tarawa Atoll.

Recent History

In 1892 the United Kingdom established a protectorate over the 16 atolls of the Gilbert Islands and the nine Ellice Islands (now Tuvalu). The two groups were administered together by the Western Pacific High Commission (WPHC), which was based in Fiji until its removal to the British Solomon Islands (now Solomon Islands) in 1953. The phosphate-rich Ocean Island (now Banaba), west of the Gilberts, was annexed by the United Kingdom in 1900. The Gilbert and Ellice islands were annexed in 1915, effective from January 1916, when the protectorate became a colony. The local representative of the WPHC was a Resident Commissioner, based on Tarawa Atoll in the Gilbert group. Later in 1916 the new Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony (GEIC) was extended to include Ocean Island and two of the Line Islands, far to the east. Christmas Island (now Kiritimati), another of the Line Islands, was added in 1919, and the eight Phoenix Islands (then uninhabited) in 1937. The Line and Phoenix Islands, south of Hawaii, were also claimed by the USA. A joint British-US administration for two of the Phoenix group, Canton (now Kanton) and Enderbury, was agreed in April 1939.

During the Second World War the GEIC was invaded by Japanese forces, who occupied the Gilbert Islands in 1942–43. Tarawa Atoll was the scene of some of the fiercest fighting in the Pacific between Japan and the USA.

In 1963, to prepare the GEIC for self-government, the first of a series of legislative and executive bodies were established. In January 1972 a Governor of the GEIC was appointed to assume almost all the functions previously exercised in the colony by the High Commissioner. At the same time, the five uninhabited Central and Southern Line Islands, previously administered directly by the High Commissioner, became part of the GEIC. In May 1974 the Legislative Council was replaced by a House of Assembly, with 28 elected members and three official members. A Chief Minister, Naboua Ratieta, was elected by the House and chose between four and six other Ministers.

On 1 October 1975 the Ellice Islands were allowed to break away from the GEIC to form a separate territory, named Tuvalu. The remainder of the GEIC was renamed the Gilbert Islands, and the House of Assembly's membership was reduced.

In 1975 the British Government refused to recognize as legitimate an independence move by the people of Ocean Island (Banaba), who had been in litigation with the British Government since 1971 over revenues derived from exports of phosphate. Open-cast mining so adversely affected the island's environment that the Banabans had been resettled on Rabi Island, 2,600 km (1,600 miles) away in the Fiji group. The Banabans rejected the British Government's argument that phosphate revenues should be spread over the whole territory of the Gilbert Islands. In 1976 the British High Court in London dismissed the Banabans' claim for unpaid royalties but upheld that for damages. In May 1977 the British Government offered an ex gratia payment of $A10m. without admitting liability for damages and on condition that no further appeal would be made to the courts. The offer was not accepted. The Banaban emissary to London, the Rev. Tebuke Rotan, was unsuccessful in pressing the case for the constitutional separation of the island.

In November 1977 the Rabi Council of Leaders met with Gilbertese ministers at Bairiki, Tarawa, and drew up 11 'Bairiki Resolutions'. It was proposed that, prior to the forthcoming constitutional conference to decide the question of the independence of the Gilbert Islands, a referendum would be held to determine the status of Banaba. The British Government agreed to abide by the result of the proposed referendum, but refused to increase the offer of compensation made to the Banabans in May 1977. It was reported in April 1978 that the Banabans had agreed to accept the judgment of the British High Court made in 1976, having been warned by legal advisers that they would be unlikely to win if they appealed against the judgment. However, the Banabans continued to press their claim for compensation and independence.

The Gilbert Islands obtained internal self-government on 1 January 1977. Later in 1977 the number of elected members in the House of Assembly was increased to 36, and provision was subsequently made for a member appointed by the Rabi Council of Leaders. Following a general election in February 1978, Ieremia Tabai, Leader of the Opposition in the previous House, was elected Chief Minister in March. In December 1978 the Banabans were represented at a conference on the independence of the Gilbert Islands but, when the conference decided that Banaba should remain within the Gilbert Islands after independence, the Banaban delegation walked out. On 12 July 1979 the Gilbert Islands became an independent republic, within the Commonwealth, under the name of Kiribati. The House of Assembly was renamed the Maneaba ni Maungatabu, and Ieremia Tabai became the country's first President (Beretitenti). In September Kiribati signed a treaty of friendship with the USA, which relinquished its claim to the Line and Phoenix Islands, including Kanton and Enderbury. In April 1981 the Banaban community on Rabi accepted the British Government's earlier ex gratia offer of $A10m. in compensation, together with the interest accrued ($A14.58m. in total), although they continued to seek self-government.

The first general election since independence began in March 1982, with a second round of voting in April. The members of the new Maneaba all sat as independents. President Tabai was re-elected in May. However, the Government resigned in December, following the Maneaba's second rejection of proposals to increase salaries for civil servants. As a result, the Maneaba was dissolved, and another general election took place in January 1983, when two members of the outgoing Cabinet lost their seats. In February President Tabai was re-elected for his third (and thus his finally permitted) term of office.

Government

Kiribati is a republic. Legislative power is vested in the Maneaba ni Maungatabu, a unicameral body. It has 36 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution), one nominated representative of the Banaban community and, if he is not an elected member, the Attorney-General as an ex officio member. The Head of State is the Beretitenti (President), who is also Head of Government. The President is elected by direct popular vote. The President governs with the assistance of a Vice-President and Cabinet, whom he appoints from among members of the Maneaba. Executive authority is vested in the Cabinet, which is responsible to the Maneaba.

Economic Affairs

Until 1979 phosphate rock, derived from rich deposits of guano, was mined on Banaba by the British Phosphate Commission for export to Australia and New Zealand, where it was used for fertilizer. The ending of phosphate production has had a devastating effect on the economy, as receipts from phosphates accounted, on average, for about 80% of total export earnings and 50% of government taxation revenue. It has been estimated that, owing to the cessation of phosphate mining, the country's gross domestic product per head declined from about US $750 to $350.

Apart from Banaba, Kiribati is composed of coral atolls with poor quality soil. Most of them are covered with coconut palms, which provide the only agricultural export in the form of copra. A government-owned company operates a coconut plantation on Kiritimati, and there are commercial plantations on two other atolls in the Line Islands. Seaweed-farming trials in the lagoon of South Tarawa were declared successful in 1984, and plans were announced to farm 200 ha. Most islanders are fully engaged in subsistence activities. Bananas, pandanus, breadfruit and pawpaw are grown as food crops. Fishing is an important local activity, and considerable hopes are placed on the development of marine resources, particularly skipjack tuna fishing around the Phoenix Islands. In 1984 Japan agreed to provide $A2.8m. for a mothership to take local catches to the cannery at Pago Pago in American Samoa. In 1983, 63 families were settled on land on Kiritimati as part of a plan to develop the island, which comprises more than one-half of the total land area of Kiribati, as an alternative economic centre to South Tarawa.

The islands rely heavily on foreign aid, major contributors being the United Kingdom (which provided $A7 m. for development in 1982), Australia, Japan, New Zealand and the United Nations.

Transport and Communications

Transport between the atolls is very difficult because of the enormous area over which they are scattered. There are wharves at Kanton and Tarawa, and ports of entry at Banaba, Tabuaeran (Fanning) and Kiritimati. A government boat calls at each atoll once a month. International flights operate through Tarawa, and there are 17 other small airfields. In 1981 a telephone link was established with Australia.

Social Welfare

The Government maintains a free medical service. Each atoll has a dispensary, with a medical assistant in charge. In 1978 Kiribati had 23 hospital establishments, with a total of 460 beds, and in 1979 there were 19 physicians working in the country.

Education

Education is compulsory for children between six and 15 years of age. This generally involves six years at a primary school and at least three years at a secondary school. Every atoll is provided with at least one primary school. An estimated 92% of children aged six to 12 receive primary education. In 1981 there were 103 primary schools, of which 99 were operated by the Government and four were private institutions. There are five secondary schools, one maintained by the Government and four by church missions. Two community high schools enrolled a total of 674 students in 1981. The Government also maintains a teacher-training college, a technical institute and a marine training school, which trains about 200 seamen each year for employment by overseas shipping companies.

In 1981 enrolment figures were 13,383 in primary schools and 979 in secondary schools. The total number of teachers in all establishments was 592. Kiribati participates in the University of the South Pacific, based in Fiji.

Tourism

There is very little tourism, owing to the islands' remoteness, although there are two hotels, and the island of Kiritimati is considered to have potential for tourist development.

Public Holidays

1985: 12 July (Independence Day), 4 August (Youth Day), 25, 26 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year), 28–31 March (Easter).

Statistical Survey

AREA AND POPULATION

Area: 717 sq km (277 sq miles) of land.

Population: 51,926 (census of 8 Dec. 1973); 56,213 (Males 27,726; Females 28,487) at census of 12 Dec. 1978; 60,302 (estimate for Dec. 1982); Tarawa (capital) 17,921 (census of 12 Dec. 1978).

Economically Active Population (1978): Government service and private enterprise 6,005, phosphate mining in Banaba and Republic of Nauru and other employment outside Kiribati 988.

AGRICULTURE, ETC.

Livestock (1982): 10,000 pigs, 177,000 chickens (FAO estimates).

MINING

FINANCE

Currency and Exchange Rates: Australian currency: 100 cents = 1 Australian dollar ($A). Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents. Notes: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 dollars. Sterling and US Dollar Equivalents (31 December 1984): £1 sterling = $A1.403; US $1 = $A1.2115; $A100 = £71.26 = US $82.54. Average Exchange Rate (US $ per Australian dollar): 1.1493 in 1981; 1.0174 in 1982; 0.9025 in 1983.

Budget (1982): revenue $A15,871,000; expenditure $A16,956,000; Development Programme: revenue $A5,900,000, expenditure $A5,800,000; Reserve Fund $A86,600,000 (March 1983).

Cost of Living (Consumer Price Index, 1975 = 100): September-December 1982: Food 189.2, Clothing 159.7, Housing and Household 280.8, General Index 192.1.

EXTERNAL TRADE

1981 (estimates): Imports: $A19,912,000; Exports: $A3,600,000 (of which copra $A2,638,000 and fish $A708,400).

TRANSPORT

Roads: there are about 640 km suitable for motor vehicles.

Shipping: the Government and the Kiribati Shipping Corporation maintain a fleet of six passenger/freight vessels for administrative business. During 1980 71 overseas vessels called at the islands.

EDUCATION

Primary (1981): 103 schools; 13,383 students.

Secondary (1981): 5 schools; 979 students.

The Constitution

A new constitution was promulgated at independence on 12 July 1979. The main provisions are as follows:

The Constitution states that Kiribati is a sovereign democratic Republic and that the Constitution is the supreme law. It guarantees protection of all fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual and provides for the determination of citizenship.

The President, known as the Beretitenti, is Head of State and Head of the Government and presides over the Cabinet which consists of the Beretitenti, the Kauoman-ni-Beretitenti (Vice-President), the Attorney-General and not more than eight other ministers appointed by the Beretitenti from an elected parliament known as the Maneaba ni Maungatabu. Executive authority is vested in the Cabinet which is directly responsible to the Maneaba ni Maungatabu. The Constitution also provides for a Council of State consisting of the Chairman of the Public Services Commission, the Chief Justice and the Speaker.

Legislative power resides with the single-chamber Maneaba ni Maungatabu, composed of 36 members elected for four years, one nominated member (see below) and the Attorney-General as an ex officio member if he is not elected. The Maneaba is presided over by a Speaker, who is elected by the Maneaba from among persons who are not members of the Maneaba.

One chapter makes special provision for Banaba and the Banabans, stating that one seat in the Maneaba is reserved for a nominated member of the Banaban community. The Banabans' inalienable right to enter and reside in Banaba is guaranteed and, where any right over or interest in land there has been acquired by the Republic of Kiribati or by the Crown before independence, the Republic is required to hand back the land on completion of phosphate extraction. A Banaba Island Council is provided for and also the establishment of an independent Commission of Inquiry three years after Independence Day to review the provisions relating to Banaba.

The Constitution also makes provision for finance, for a Public Service and for an independent judiciary (see Judicial System).

Mate T. Moaniba (acting).

THE DEMOCRATIC PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF KOREA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea occupies the northern part of the Korean peninsula, bordered to the north by the People's Republic of China and to the south by the Republic of Korea. The climate is continental, with cold, dry winters and hot, humid summers; temperatures range from −6° to 25 °C (21° to 77°F). The language is Korean. Buddhism, Confucianism, Daoism, Shamanism and Chundo Kyo are the principal religions. The national flag (proportions 65 by 33) is red, with blue stripes on the upper and lower edges, each separated from the red by a narrow white stripe. Left of centre is a white disc containing a five-pointed red star. The capital is Pyongyang.

Recent History

Korea was formerly an independent monarchy. It was occupied by Japanese forces in 1905 and formally annexed by Japan in 1910, when the Emperor was deposed. Following Japan's surrender in August 1945, ending the Second World War, Korea was divided at latitude 38°N into military occupation zones, with Soviet forces in the North and US forces in the South. In the North a Provisional People's Committee, led by Kim Il Sung of the Korean Communist Party (KCP), was established in February 1946 and given government status by the Soviet occupation forces. In July 1946 the KCP merged with another group to form the North Korean Workers' Party. In 1947 a Supreme People's Assembly was established and Kim Il Sung became Premier. A new Assembly was elected in August 1948 and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) was proclaimed on 9 September. Initially, the DPRK was recognized only by the USSR and other communist countries. Soviet forces withdrew from North Korea in December 1948. By a merger between communists in the North and South, the Korean Workers' Party (KWP) was formed in June 1949. The KWP, led by Kim Il Sung, has held power in North Korea ever since.

Korea remained partitioned into two republics, each claiming to have legitimate jurisdiction over the whole peninsula. The Korean War began when North Korean forces invaded the South in June 1950. The UN mounted a collective defence action in support of South Korea, and the invasion was repelled. North Korean forces were supported by the People's Republic of China from October 1950. Peace talks began in July 1951 and an armistice agreement was made in July 1953. The cease-fire line, roughly following the 38th parallel, remains the frontier between North and South Korea. A demilitarized zone, supervised by UN forces, separates the two countries. North and South Korea are not members of the UN but both have observer status at the General Assembly and have joined certain UN specialized agencies.

In 1971 talks took place for the first time between the Red Cross Societies of both North and South Korea. In 1972 both parties affirmed that reunification should be achieved through peaceful means. Reunification talks were, however, suspended in 1973, and hopes for better relations were undermined by a series of clashes between North and South Korean vessels in disputed waters during 1974. Propaganda campaigns, suspended by agreement in 1972, were resumed by both sides, and minor border incidents have continued. In October 1978 the UN command accused North Korea of threatening the 1953 truce, after the discovery of an underground tunnel (the third since 1974) beneath the demilitarized zone. The increasing prominence of Kim Il Sung's son, Kim Jong Il, who advocates a hard line against the South, aggravated the situation. In 1982 each side rejected the other's proposals for reunification.

In January 1984 the DPRK suggested tripartite talks on reunification, involving North and South Korea and the USA. This offer marked a significant change in position, since South Korea was to be directly included for the first time, but the proposal was rejected by President Chun of South Korea, who called instead for direct bilateral talks between the two Koreas. During 1984 the DPRK adopted an apparently more conciliatory attitude towards the South: the propaganda campaign was toned down, and in September Pyongyang offered emergency relief to flood-stricken areas of the South. Following the delivery of this aid (in the form of goods worth an estimated US $12m.), the DPRK agreed to resume negotiations with the South. In November the first talks, on possible economic co-operation, were held, and discussions aimed at reuniting divided families, and forming a joint sports team for the 1988 Olympic Games, were also proposed. These talks were postponed, however, following a shooting incident on the border in November, and were suspended indefinitely when Kim Il Sung denounced the annual South Korean-US joint military manoeuvres, planned for February 1985.

North Korea has achieved considerable success in increasing its international recognition. Diplomatic relations with more than 90 states had been established by 1985, compared with only 36 in 1970. A motion, supported by North Korea, demanding the withdrawal of UN forces from South Korea was only narrowly defeated in the United Nations in 1974. North Korean prestige was further enhanced with its entry to the Conference of Non-Aligned Nations at Lima, Peru, in August 1975, but in 1976 several North Korean diplomatists were expelled for drug trafficking and abuse of diplomatic privileges, causing embarrassment to the regime in Pyongyang. The DPRK's international standing was severely damaged in October 1983, when 17 South Koreans, including four visiting government ministers, were killed in a bomb explosion in Rangoon, Burma. North Korea was blamed for the attack. Burma severed relations with Pyongyang, while Japan imposed sanctions.

A new constitution, adopted in December 1972, created the office of President, and Kim Il Sung was elected to the post. The appointment of Kim Jong Il to several key positions within the KWP in 1980 appeared to confirm him as his father's choice of successor. By 1983 he had reportedly assumed effective control of government, economic and military affairs, and his invitation to Beijing, which he visited in June, marked an apparent Chinese approval of this proposed first Communist dynasty. In July 1984 Radio Pyongyang referred to Kim Jong Il, for the first time, as the 'sole successor' to his father, but there were reports of domestic opposition to the son, particularly among older members of the KWP.

General elections to the 7th Supreme People's Assembly were held in February 1982 (when the 615 members were elected unopposed). At the first session, held in April, Kim Il Sung was re-elected President, and a new Administration Council was formed by Premier Li Jong Ok. In January 1984 Li Jong Ok was appointed a Vice-President, and was replaced as Premier by Kang Song San, formerly Vice-Premier.

In May–July 1984 Kim Il Sung undertook a six-week foreign tour, including his first visit to Moscow for 17 years, and a tour of seven other Eastern bloc states. It was assumed that he sought Soviet approval of the succession of Kim Jong Il, as well as renewed economic aid. In 1984 he also visited the People's Republic of China, maintaining his policy of a balance between alliance with either Moscow or Beijing.

Government

Under the 1972 Constitution, the highest organ of state power is the unicameral Supreme People's Assembly, with 615 members elected (unopposed) for four years by universal adult suffrage. The Assembly elects, for its duration, the President of the Republic and, on the latter's recommendation, other members of the Central People's Committee to direct the Government. The Assembly appoints the Premier while the Committee appoints other Ministers to form the Administration Council, led by the President.

Political power is held by the communist Korean Workers' Party (KWP), which dominates the Democratic Front for the Reunification of the Fatherland (including two other minor parties). The Front presents an approved list of candidates for elections to representative bodies. The KWP's highest authority is the Party Congress, which elects a Central Committee to supervise Party work. The Committee elects a Political Bureau to direct policy. The five-member Presidium of the Political Bureau is the KWP's most powerful policy-making body.

North Korea comprises nine provinces and two cities, each with an elected People's Assembly.

Defence

Defence treaties have been signed with the USSR and the People's Republic of China. Military service is selective: army five years, navy five years, and air force three to four years. According to Western estimates, the total strength of the armed forces in July 1984 was 784,500 men: army 700,000, air force 51,000, and navy 33,500. Security and border troops number 38,000. Defence expenditure in 1984 was estimated at 3,831m. won.

Economic Affairs

With the establishment of the Democratic People's Republic, all industry was nationalized and land distributed among the peasants. In September 1975 it was announced that virtually all the targets of the Six-Year Plan (1971–76) had been achieved 16 months ahead of schedule. At the end of 1977, after a year of readjustment, a Seven-Year Plan was announced for 1978–84. Its aim was to increase industrial output by 12.1% annually (compared with the 16.3% target for the previous Plan) and included increasing production of electricity, coal, steel, grain (cereals and pulses) and non-ferrous metals. By late 1984, however, many economic results had not been announced, indicating that planned targets had not been reached. Details of the next Seven-Year Plan had also not been revealed.

Although about 49% of the working population are still employed in agriculture, a rapid increase in industrial output occurred in the 1970s. The country is rich in mineral wealth, with large deposits of coal, iron, lead, copper, zinc, tin, silver and gold, and the DPRK accounts for between 5% and 7% of the world's production of tungsten. Industrial development has concentrated on heavy industry (metallurgy, electricity, machine-building, cement and chemicals), and expansion has been particularly evident in the steel and mining industries. North Korea's total shipbuilding capacity is estimated at 345,000 tons per year; the main shipyards are at Nampo and Chongjin. It was reported that industrial production grew at an average rate of 15.9% annually between 1970 and 1979, but annual growth under the 1978–84 plan was only 2%–3% on average, mainly owing to inadequate supplies of energy. Production of iron ore is estimated at more than 9m. tons (metal content 40%) annually. Light industry has also benefited from large-scale automation. Modernization and re-equipment of the textile industry resulted in an estimated annual output of 550m. metres of fabrics by the early 1980s. Industry relies mainly on hydroelectric power, although it was reported in 1982 that North Korea was searching for offshore deposits of petroleum. North Korea has found itself lagging behind in industrial techniques and is turning increasingly towards the West for sophisticated machinery and technology. In 1984 it was announced that trade and economic and technical ties with capitalist countries were to be actively developed, and in April a new foreign investment law was published, marking the first move from a closed, 'self-reliant' economy to a more open one. The law, closely modelled on China's joint-venture code, was apparently aimed mainly at Japanese investors, but in December a joint venture with a French firm, on a hotel construction programme, was announced. In addition, economic links between North and South Korea were discussed for the first time in November 1984. Major sectors of the DPRK's economy are still heavily dependent on extensive Soviet financial and technical aid. A UNDP grant of US $16.6m., announced in 1983, was to be used to upgrade the industrial and technological sectors, and to improve the transport network.

Rapid mechanization of agriculture has meant that North Korea, which formerly had to import food, now claims self-sufficiency. In 1984 it was claimed that the grain harvest reached 10m. tons, but the target is 15m. tons by the end of the decade. Current irrigation schemes have included the construction of 39,723 km of canals. In 1982 work began on a huge land reclamation project to create 3,000 sq km of new farmland from tidal flats along the west coast and effectively to increase the total land area by about 2.5%.

The World Bank has estimated that North Korean GNP totalled US $17,040m. in 1978 (per caput GNP $1,000). Between 1970 and 1978 the average annual increase in per caput GNP is estimated to have been 3.8%. Since 1973 North Korea has experienced increasingly serious difficulties with its balance of payments, and has defaulted on the repayment of several foreign loans. In 1979 it was estimated that the principal creditors were the USSR ($700m.), Japan ($400m.), the Federal Republic of Germany ($150m.) and Italy ($26m.). Other major trading partners are Czechoslovakia, Poland and the German Democratic Republic. The DPRK is reportedly the major supplier of armaments to Iran, and receives payment partly in petroleum. Total trade in 1982 was estimated at US $2,200m., 17% higher than in 1981. Of this trade, 60% was with the People's Republic of China and the USSR, and 20% with Japan. The foreign debt, however, was put at US $2,000m.–$3,000m. It was reported in 1983 that the DPRK aims to increase the value of its exports 4.2 times by the end of the decade, compared with the figure for 1980.

Transport and Communications

The road and rail network was almost completely destroyed during the Korean War. Electrification of the new railway system is proceeding rapidly, and there are direct rail links with Moscow and Beijing. Roads have been rebuilt to take the increasing traffic but have a low priority to avoid over-dependence on imported fuel. There are regular passenger and freight services along the Aprok, Daidong and Ryesung rivers. International air services connect Pyongyang to Beijing and Moscow.

Social Welfare

The state provides rest homes, sanitoria and free medical services. In 1982 there were 1,531 general hospitals, 979 specialized hospitals and 5,414 clinics.

Education

Free and compulsory 11-year education in state schools was introduced in 1975. Children enter kindergarten at four years of age, and primary school at the age of six. After four years, they advance to senior middle school for six years. In 1980 there were 10,000 primary and senior middle schools. There is one university, with more than 16,000 students, and about 170 other higher educational institutions. English is compulsory as a second language at the age of 14.

Tourism

Tourism has yet to be developed, although the country has great potential. Mount Keumgang and Songdowon are beauty spots.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (May Day), 15 August (Anniversary of Liberation), 9 September (Independence Day), 10 October (Anniversary of the foundation of the Korean Workers' Party), 27 December (Anniversary of the Constitution).

1986: 1 January (New Year), 15 April (Kim Il Sung's birthday).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Directory

The Constitution

A new Constitution was adopted on 27 December 1972. Its main provisions are summarized below:

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea is an independent socialist State; the revolutionary traditions of the State are stressed (its ideological basis being the Juche idea of the Workers' Party of Korea) as is the desire to achieve national reunification by peaceful means on the basis of national independence.

National sovereignty rests with the working people, who exercise power through the Supreme People's Assembly and People's Assemblies at lower levels, which are elected by universal, secret and direct suffrage.

Defence is emphasized as well as the rights of overseas nationals, the principles of friendly relations between nations based on equality, mutual respect and non-interference, proletarian internationalism, support for national liberation struggles and due observance of law.

Culture and education provide the working people with knowledge to advance a socialist way of life. Education is free and there are universal and compulsory one-year pre-school and 10-year senior middle school programmes in being.

The basic rights and duties of citizens are laid down and guaranteed. These include the right to vote (for citizens who are more than 17 years of age), to work (the working day being eight hours), to free medical care and material assistance for the old, infirm or disabled, to political asylum. National defence is the supreme duty of citizens.

THE GOVERNMENT

The President

The President as Head of State is elected for four years by the Supreme People's Assembly. He convenes and presides over Administrative Council meetings, is the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and chairman of the National Defence Commission. The President promulgates laws of the Supreme People's Assembly and decisions of the Central People's Committee and of the Standing Committee. He has the right to issue orders, to grant pardons, to ratify or abrogate treaties and to receive foreign envoys. The President is responsible to the Supreme People's Assembly.

The Supreme People's Assembly

The Supreme People's Assembly is the highest organ of State power, exercises exclusive legislative authority and is elected by direct, equal, universal and secret ballot for a term of four years. Its chief functions are: (i) to adopt or amend legal or constitutional enactments; (ii) to determine State policy; (iii) to elect the President, Vice-President, Secretary and members of the Central People's Committee (on the President's recommendation); (iv) to elect members of the Standing Committee of the Supreme People's Assembly, the Premier of the Administration Council (on the President's recommendation), the President of the Central Court and other legal officials; (v) to approve the State Plan and Budget; (vi) to decide on matters of war and peace. It holds regular and extraordinary sessions, the former being twice a year, the latter as necessary at the request of at least one-third of the deputies. Legislative enactments are adopted when approved by more than half of those deputies present. The Standing Committee is the permanent body of the Supreme People's Assembly. It examines and decides on bills; amends legislation in force when the Supreme People's Assembly is not in session; interprets the law; organizes and conducts the election of Deputies and judicial personnel.

The Central People's Committee

The Central People's Committee comprises the President, Vice-President, Secretary and Members. The Committee exercises the following chief functions: (a) to direct the work of the Administration Council as well as organs at local level; (b) to implement the constitution and legislative enactments; (c) to establish and abolish Ministries, appoint Vice-Premiers and other members of the Administration Council; (d) to appoint and recall ambassadors and defence personnel; (e) to confer titles, decorations, diplomatic appointments; (f) to grant general amnesties, make administrative changes; (g) to declare a state of war. It is assisted by a number of Commissions dealing with Internal Policy, Foreign Policy, National Defence, Justice and Security and other matters as may be established. The Central People's Committee is responsible to the Supreme People's Assembly's Standing Committee.

The Administration Council

The Administration Council is the administrative and executive body of the Supreme People's Assembly. It comprises the Premier, Vice-Premiers and such other Ministers as may be appointed. Its major functions are the following: (i) to direct the work of Ministries and other organs responsible to it; (ii) to work out the State Plan and take measures to make it effective; (iii) to compile the State Budget and to give effect to it; (iv) to organize and execute the work of all sectors of the economy as well as transport, education and social welfare; (v) to conclude treaties; (vi) to develop the armed forces and maintain public security; (vii) to annul decisions and directives of State administrative departments which run counter to those of the Administration Council. The Administration Council is responsible to the President, Central People's Committee and the Supreme People's Assembly.

People's Assemblies

The People's Assemblies of the province (or municipality directly under central authority), city (or district) and county are local organs of power. The People's Assemblies or Committees exercise local budgetary functions, elect local administrative and judicial personnel and carry out the decisions at local level of higher executive and administrative organs.

THE JUDICIARY

Justice is administered by the Central Court—the highest judicial organ of the State, the local Court, the People's Court and the Special Court. Judges and other legal officials are elected by the Supreme People's Assembly. The Central Court protects State property, Constitutional rights, guarantees that all State bodies and citizens observe State laws and executes judgments. Justice is administered by the court comprising one judge and two people's assessors. The Court is independent and judicially impartial. Judicial affairs are conducted by the Central Procurator's Office which exposes and institutes criminal proceedings against accused persons. The Office of the Central Procurator is responsible to the Supreme People's Assembly, the President, and the Central People's Committee.

Transport

RAILWAYS

By 1982 87.5% of the rail system of 4,400 km had been electrified. Electrification of the 140-km link between Kilchu and Hyesan was reported to have been completed in 1978, of the Motga–Rimyongsu, Pyongyang–Nampo and Kocham–Sinmyongchon lines in 1979 and the Hoeryong–Komusan line in 1982. Further improvements are being undertaken.

There is an underground railway system in Pyongyang.

THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Korea forms the southern part of the Korean peninsula. To the north, separated by a frontier which roughly follows the 38th parallel, is the country's only neighbour, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. The climate is marked by cold, dry winters, with an average temperature of −6°C (21°F), and hot, humid summers, with an average temperature of 25°C (77°F). The language is Korean. Mahayana Buddhism is the principal religion, with more than 11m. adherents. Christians number over 9m., of whom about 80% are Protestants. Other religions include Confucianism, Daoism and Chundo Kyo, a religion peculiar to Korea, combining elements of Shaman, Buddhist and Christian doctrines. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) consists of a disc divided horizontally by an S-shaped line, red above and blue below, in the centre of a white field, with parallel black bars (broken and unbroken) in each corner. The capital is Seoul.

Recent History

(For more details of history of Korea up to 1953, including the Korean War, see Democratic People's Republic of Korea, p. 1982).

UN-supervised elections for a National Assembly were held in May 1948. The Assembly adopted a democratic constitution and South Korea became the independent Republic of Korea on 15 August 1948, with Dr Syngman Rhee, leader of the Liberal Party, as the country's first President. South Korea, like its northern neighbour, did not join the UN, although it has become a member of numerous UN specialized agencies.

President Rhee was forced to resign in April 1960. Elections in July were won by the Democratic Party, led by Chang Myon, but his government was deposed in May 1961 by a military coup, led by Gen. Park Chung-Hee. Power was assumed by a Supreme Council for National Reconstruction (SCNR), which dissolved the National Assembly, suspended the constitution and disbanded all existing political parties. In January 1963 the military leadership formed the Democratic Republican Party (DRP). Under a new constitution, Gen. Park became President of the Third Republic in December.

Opposition to President Park's regime led to the imposition of martial law in October 1972. A constitution for the Fourth Republic, giving the President greatly increased powers, was approved by national referendum in November. A new body, the National Conference for Unification (NCU), was elected in December. The NCU re-elected President Park for a six-year term and the DRP obtained a decisive majority in elections for the new National Assembly. In May 1975 opposition to the Government was effectively banned, and political trials followed. Elections for the NCU were held in May 1978, and the President was re-elected for a further six-year term in July. In October 1979 serious rioting erupted when Kim Young-Sam, the leader of the opposition New Democratic Party (NDP), was accused of subversive activities and expelled from the National Assembly. On 26 October President Park was assassinated in an alleged coup attempt by Kim Chae-Gyu, Chief of the Korean Central Intelligence Agency (KCIA), and six other presidential aides. On the following day, martial law was introduced (with the Army Chief of Staff as martial law administrator), except on the island of Cheju, and the Prime Minister, Choi Kyu-Hah, became Acting President. He was elected President by the NCU on 6 December. Instability in the DRP and the army resulted in a military coup on 12–13 December, led by the head of the Defence Security Command, Lt-Gen. Chun Doo-Hwan, who arrested the martial law administrator and effectively took power. Nevertheless, President Choi was inaugurated on 21 December to complete his predecessor's term of office (1978–84).

President Choi promised liberalizing reforms, but in May 1980 demonstrations by students and confrontation with the army led to the arrest of about 30 political leaders, including Kim Dae-Jung, former head of the NDP. Martial law was extended throughout the country, the National Assembly was closed and all political activity banned. Nevertheless, students and dissidents in the southern city of Kwangju took over the city, which was recaptured only after troops had stormed it, leaving nearly 200 dead. The State Council resigned and a new Council, headed by Acting Prime Minister Park Choong-Hoon, was appointed. The Special Committee for National Security Measures (SCNSM) was formed, with Gen. Chun as Chairman of its Standing Committee. In August President Choi resigned and Gen. Chun was elected President. Acting Prime Minister Nam Duck-Woo formed a new State Council in September. Kim Dae-Jung received a death sentence (later suspended) for plotting rebellion, provoking strong international protest. In October a new constitution was approved overwhelmingly by referendum. The SCNSM was reorganized to form the 81-member Legislative Council for National Security. In November some 835 politicians were banned from participation in the political process.

Martial law was lifted in January 1981 and new political parties were formed. In February President Chun was re-elected, and in March, with his inauguration, the Fifth Republic emerged. Elections were held for a new National Assembly, and President Chun's Democratic Justice Party (DJP) became the majority party. The Legislative Council for National Security was dissolved, and in April the KCIA was renamed the Agency for National Security. Yoo Chang-Sun, a businessman who had been Minister of Commerce and Industry in 1962–63, succeeded Nam Duck-Woo as Prime Minister in January 1982 but was, in turn, replaced by Kim Sang Hyup, a former Minister of Education, in June. Amid opposition demands for liberalization, President Chun announced three amnesties during 1983, and pledged that he would step down at the end of his term in 1988, thus becoming the first President to hand over power constitutionally. In October 1983, following the assassination of several Ministers (see below), President Chun appointed a new State Council, with Chin Iee-Chong, former Chairman of the DJP, as Prime Minister.

During 1984 there was an escalation of student unrest on campuses throughout South Korea, and demonstrations against the Government continued during the visit of Pope John Paul II in May. However, the Government adopted a more flexible attitude to dissidents, in line with its policy of cautious liberalization prior to the 1985 elections. Several thousand prisoners were released, and in November 1984 the ban on 84 politicians was also lifted, leaving only 15 of the original 835 names on the political blacklist. In January 1985 a new opposition party, the New Korea Democratic Party (NKDP), was launched by followers of Kim Young-Sam and Kim Dae-Jung. At the general election to the National Assembly, held in February, the DJP retained its majority, but the NKDP emerged as the major opposition force, boosted by the return from exile of Kim Dae-Jung immediately before the election. The new party won about 30% of the total direct votes, mainly at the expense of the older opposition parties, but the DJP suffered losses in urban areas. Following his party's setback, President Chun appointed a new State Council, with Lho Shin-Yong, a former Minister of Foreign Affairs, as Prime Minister. In March the political blacklist was finally abolished.

In September 1983 a South Korean Boeing-747 airliner, having apparently strayed into USSR airspace, was shot down by a Soviet fighter aircraft, and the 269 people on board were presumed dead. The incident aroused widespread condemnation of the USSR, and precipitated severe tension between East and West.

Relations with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea continue to be strained. Various incidents, including the discovery of several underground pro-North Korean spy rings and increased anti-South Korea agitation in the North, have all worsened the situation. In October 1983 relations between the two Korean states deteriorated dangerously after four South Korean State Council ministers, including Foreign Minister Lee Bum Suk, were among the victims of a bomb explosion during a state visit to Rangoon in Burma. President Chun immediately blamed North Korea for the attack, which deprived him of his most influential political aides. In February 1984 he rejected the North's proposal for tripartite talks on reunification (involving the USA as well as North and South Korea), insisting instead on direct bilateral negotiations between the two Korean states. During 1984 the Seoul Government remained suspicious of Pyongyang's apparently more conciliatory approach (see chapter on the Democratic People's Republic of Korea), but some progress was made, and there were hopes that talks between the two states on economic and humanitarian issues might proceed in 1985.

Relations between South Korea and the USA were frequently strained during the Carter administration, in particular by the proposal to withdraw US ground troops from South Korea, which was abandoned in 1979, and by the trial of Kim Dae-Jung. The US commitment to South Korea was reaffirmed, however, during a visit by US President Ronald Reagan in November 1983. Relations between South Korea and Japan, which had long been overshadowed by the memory of Japan's colonial treatment of Korea, improved following a visit to Tokyo by President Chun (the first ever state visit to Japan by a Korean head of state) in September 1984.

Government

Under the Constitution of the Fifth Republic, adopted in October 1980, executive power is held by the President, indirectly elected for one term of seven years by the Presidential Electoral College. The first College had 5,278 members, elected in February 1981 by universal adult suffrage. After the inauguration of President Chun in March, the College was dissolved. The President governs with the assistance of an appointed State Council (Cabinet), led by a Prime Minister. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral National Assembly, popularly elected for a four-year term. The Assembly has 276 members: 184 directly elected (two each from 92 districts, although no political party is allowed more than one candidate per district) and 92 additional members (61 for the party gaining the most seats by direct election, with the remaining 31 distributed among other parties in proportion to seats won directly).

Defence

Protection of the Korean frontier is a responsibility of the UN. Military service lasts for 30 months in the army and the marines, and for three years in the navy and the air force. In July 1984 the strength of the armed forces was 622,000 men: army 540,000, navy 49,000, air force 33,000. Defence expenditure for 1984 was 3,452,000m. won.

Economic Affairs

The economy was severely disrupted by the Korean War, but a rapid recovery was achieved, partly as a result of aid from the UN Korean Rehabilitation Agency and from the USA. Agriculture is the principal source of employment, with 33% of the working population engaged in agriculture and fishing in 1983. However, agriculture accounts for only about 12.5% of gross national product (GNP). The principal crop is rice. Wheat, barley and sweet potatoes are also important. South Korea was self-sufficient in staple crops in 1977, but this trend did not continue, and in most years it is necessary to import rice and other food grains. Fishing provides food and a surplus for export, and South Korea is now one of the world's leading ocean-fishing nations. A deep-sea fishing base and associated processing plants have been built at Ulsan, and the port of Masan has been developed into a fisheries centre. However, the fishing industry has been seriously affected by the establishment of exclusive fishing zones by many countries.

Manufacturing has played an increasingly large role in the economy, particularly textiles, electronics, motor vehicles, steel and petrochemicals. Shipbuilding has become a major industry. South Korean yards accounted for around 20% of world shipbuilding orders in 1983 (an increase of 163% over 1982, with a total capacity of 5.5m. dwt), and ship repair facilities are being expanded. South Korea is heavily dependent on imported petroleum, and alternative forms of energy, including nuclear power, are being emphasized. The Government's long-term energy policy aims to put more emphasis on coal as an alternative source, in order to reduce South Korea's dependence on petroleum from 60.3% in 1982 to just under 50% by 1986. There are substantial coal deposits, and other minerals include iron ore, tungsten, gold, graphite and fluorite. Large loans were secured from Japan, the USA, the World Bank and Western Europe for the expansion of oil refineries to support the petro-chemical industry. A national oil company was established in 1974 to supervise petroleum exploration. In 1981 the mining and manufacturing sectors together accounted for 39% of GNP.

Subsequent to the implementation of the first Five-Year Plan in 1962, real GNP grew at an average annual rate of over 9%, manufacturing output at nearly 20% and the volume of exports at over 30%. This high level of growth was maintained until the late 1970s. In 1980, however, GNP fell by 6.2%, largely owing to a poor rice crop, but in 1981 a record harvest and a 21% increase in exports boosted the economy, and GNP grew by 6.4%. GNP grew by 5.3% in real terms in 1982, and by 9.5% in 1983, owing mainly to an 11% increase in manufacturing output. The value of exports rose by 11% in 1983, while imports increased by only 6.4%. The rate of economic growth declined sharply in 1984, however, partly as a result of crop damage, caused by extensive flooding, but GNP was still expected to grow by around 7.5%. Unemployment in 1983 averaged 4.2%, while inflation was 3.4%, compared with 7.3% in 1982. In July 1983, to assist South Korea's economic growth, the IMF approved a two-year stand-by arrangement of 575.8m. SDRs.

The USA and Japan are South Korea's principal trading partners. An important source of 'invisible' export earnings is overseas construction work, mostly in the Middle East (which accounted for 91.2% of total contracts in 1984). The value of South Korean overseas construction contracts in 1984 fell, however, to the lowest level for four years. Receipts from tourism are also significant. South Korea's capital market is gradually being opened to foreign investors to attract additional investment. Rules on foreign investment were further eased in 1984, while a plan to liberalize radically the country's financial system from 1986 is to ease restrictions on foreign banks, allowing them to operate under the same conditions as local banks.

In December 1983 the Government announced numerous revisions to the fifth Five-Year Plan (1982–86), reflecting optimism about the country's economic outlook, owing mainly to lower energy prices than originally forecast. Exports are now expected to increase by 11% annually, inflation is expected to fall to 2%, and a gradual improvement in the current account is expected to lead to South Korea's first-ever trade surplus in 1986. The country's outstanding foreign debt, standing at around US $40,000m. at the end of 1983 (among the highest in the world), is planned to total $47,400m. by 1986.

Transport and Communications

In 1982 South Korea had 6,045 km of railway track. In 1983 the road network totalled 54,599 km, of which around 21,000 km were paved. Coastal shipping is important, the chief ports being Pusan, Inchon and Masan. There are international airports at Kimpo (Seoul), Pusan and Cheju, and another is planned at Chongju. Domestic and international air services are provided by Korean Air Lines. In 1970 a satellite communications system became operational at the Kumsan ground station, which relays signals via an Intelsat-3 satellite. The first line of the Seoul underground railway system opened in 1974 and the network will eventually cover 142 km. A subway system is also under construction in Pusan.

Social Welfare

The Government provides social relief services for handicapped people, for wounded ex-servicemen and for war widows. Special grants or subsidies are also given by numerous official and voluntary bodies to aged people, to victims of disasters and to orphans. Under the national insurance scheme, medical and industrial accident insurance covers 24% of the total population and 26% of the economically active population. In 1980 the country had 36,096 hospital beds and 25,579 registered physicians.

Education

Primary education is free and compulsory for children between six and 12 years of age. There is 100% school enrolment for this age-group. In 1983 about 5.2m. children were enrolled at primary schools, with about 4.6m. in secondary schools. In 1981 an estimated 77% of children aged 12 to 17 attended secondary schools. There are 98 universities and colleges, and 170 graduate schools. In 1981 student enrolment in higher education was around 833,200. In 1980 adult illiteracy averaged 5.7% (males 2.4%, females 9.1%).

Tourism

Korea has much to offer in mountain scenery, while the country's temples, museums and the Royal Palaces at Seoul contain many examples of traditional Korean arts. There are excellent facilities for hunting and fishing. Tourism is now a major source of foreign exchange, earning US $460m. in 1981. In 1984 about 1.3m. foreign tourists visited South Korea.

Directory

The Constitution

The Constitution of the Fifth Republic was approved by national referendum on 22 October 1980. It came into effect on 27 October 1980. The main provisions are summarized below.

THE EXECUTIVE

The President

The President is to be elected by the Presidential Electoral College for one term of seven years. In times of national emergency and under certain conditions the President shall have power to take necessary emergency measures in all matters of State. He shall notify the National Assembly of these measures and obtain its concurrence, or they shall lose effect. He may, in times of war, armed conflict or similar national emergency, declare martial law in accordance with the provisions of law. He shall lift the emergency measures and martial law when the National Assembly so requests with the concurrence of a majority of the members. He is authorized to take directly to the people important issues through national referenda, and may dissolve the National Assembly but not within one year of its formation. A general election shall be held within 30 to 60 days from the date of dissolution. The President shall appoint public officials.

The State Council

The State Council shall be composed of the President, the Prime Minister and no more than 30 and no fewer than 15 others appointed by the President, and shall deliberate on policies that fall within the power of the executive.

The Board of Audit and Inspection

The Board of Audit and Inspection shall be established under the President to inspect the closing of accounts of revenue and expenditures, the accounts of the State and other organizations as prescribed by law, and to inspect the administrative functions of the executive agencies and public officials. It shall be composed of no fewer than five and no more than 11 members, including the Chairman. The Chairman shall be appointed by the President with the consent of the National Assembly, and the members by the President on the recommendation of the Chairman. Appointments shall be for four years and members may be reappointed only once.

THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The National Assembly shall be composed of more than 200 members, two-thirds of whom are elected for four years by universal, equal, direct and secret ballot, the remaining third proportioned to the parties as determined by law. A regular session shall be held once a year and extraordinary sessions shall be convened upon requests of the President or one-third of the Assembly's members. The period of regular sessions shall not exceed 90 days and of extraordinary sessions 30 days. The legislative power shall be vested in the National Assembly. It has the power to recommend to the President the removal of the Prime Minister or any other Minister. The National Assembly shall have the authority to pass a motion for the impeachment of the President or any other public official.

THE CONSTITUTION COMMITTEE

The Constitution Committee shall be composed of nine members appointed by the President, three of whom shall be appointed from persons selected by the National Assembly and three from persons nominated by the Chief Justice. The term of office shall be six years. It shall pass judgment upon the constitutionality of laws upon the request of the Court, matters of impeachment and the dissolution of political parties. In these judgments the concurrence of six members or more shall be required.

THE JUDICIARY

The courts shall be composed of the Supreme Court, which is the highest court of the State, and other courts at specified levels (for further details see Judicial System, page 2003). When the constitutionality of a law is a prerequisite to a trial the Court shall request a decision of the Constitution Committee. The Supreme Court shall have the power to pass judgment upon the constitutionality or legality of administrative decrees, and shall have final appellate jurisdiction over military tribunals.

POLITICAL PARTIES

The establishment of political parties shall be free and the plural party system guaranteed. However, a political party whose aims or activities are contrary to the basic democratic order may be dissolved by the Constitution Committee.

AMENDMENTS

A motion to amend the Constitution shall be proposed by the President or by a majority of the total members of the National Assembly. Proposed amendments to the Constitution shall be put before the public by the President for 20 days or more. Within 60 days of the public announcement, the National Assembly shall decide upon the proposed amendments, which require a two-thirds majority of the National Assembly. They shall then be submitted to a national referendum not later than 30 days after passage by the National Assembly and shall be determined by more than one-half of votes cast by more than one-half of voters eligible to vote in elections for members of the National Assembly. If these conditions are fulfilled, the proposed amendments shall be finalized and the President shall promulgate them without delay.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

Under the constitution all citizens are equal before the law. Freedom of speech, press, assembly and association are guaranteed, as are freedom of choice of residence and occupation. No state religion is to be recognized and freedom of conscience and religion is guaranteed. Citizens are protected against retrospective legislation, and may not be punished without due process of law.

Besides legal limitations on certain of these rights as provided for in specific provisions of the constitution, there is a general clause stating that rights and freedoms may be restricted by law when this is deemed necessary for the maintenance of national security, order or public welfare.

KUWAIT

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The State of Kuwait lies at the north-west extreme of the Persian (Arabian) Gulf, bordered to the north-west by Iraq and to the south by Saudi Arabia. The State comprises a mainland region and nine small islands. The largest Kuwaiti island is Bubyan, although the most populous is Failaka. Immediately to the south of Kuwait, along the Gulf, lies a Neutral (Partitioned) Zone of 5,700 sq km, which is shared between Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. Much of the country is arid desert, and the climate is generally hot and humid. Summer temperatures may exceed 50°C (122°F), and in January, the coldest month, temperatures range between −2.8°C and 28.3°C (27°F to 85°F). Annual rainfall varies from 10mm (0.4 in) to 370mm (14.6 in). The official language is Arabic, which is spoken by virtually all Kuwaiti nationals (42.6% of Kuwait's population in 1983) and by many of the non-Kuwaiti residents of the country. English is also used in commercial circles. Apart from other Arabs, the non-Kuwaitis are mainly Iranians, Indians and Pakistanis. At the 1975 census 95.0% of the population were Muslims (of whom about 70% are now thought to belong to the Sunni sect), while 4.5% were Christians, Hindus or adherents of other faiths. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has three equal horizontal stripes, of green, white and red, with a superimposed black trapezoid at the hoist. The capital is Kuwait City.

Recent History

Kuwait became part of Turkey's Ottoman Empire in the 16th century. During the later years of Ottoman rule, Kuwait became a semi-autonomous Arab monarchy, with local administration controlled by a Sheikh of the Sabah family, which continues to be the ruling dynasty. In 1899, fearing an extension of Turkish control, the ruler of Kuwait made a treaty with the United Kingdom, accepting British protection while surrendering control over external relations. In 1918, at the end of the First World War, the Ottoman Empire was dissolved, and nominal Turkish suzerainty over Kuwait ended. The sheikhdom remained a self-governing British protectorate until 1961.

During the reign of Sheikh Ahmed, who ruled Kuwait from 1921 to 1950, work began on the development of the country's petroleum industry, the basis of Kuwait's modern prosperity. Petroleum was first discovered in 1938, when the Burgan oilfield was located, but exploration was interrupted by the Second World War (1939–45). After the war, drilling resumed on a large scale and extensive deposits of petroleum were discovered. Supported by revenues from petroleum exploitation, Kuwait City developed from a small dhow port into a thriving modern commercial centre. Sheikh Ahmed died in 1950 and was succeeded by his cousin, Sheikh Abdullah al-Salem al-Sabah. With a policy of using petroleum revenues substantially for the welfare of his people, he inaugurated a programme of public works and educational developments in 1951. This has transformed Kuwait into a planned and well-equipped country, with one of the world's most comprehensive systems of welfare services.

Kuwait became fully independent on 19 June 1961, when the United Kingdom and Kuwait terminated the 1899 treaty by mutual agreement. The ruler took the title of Amir and assumed full executive power. Kuwait was admitted to the Arab League in July 1961, despite opposition from Iraq. Kuwait's first election took place in December 1961, when voters chose 20 members of a Constituent Assembly (the other members being appointed Cabinet ministers). This Assembly drafted a new constitution for Kuwait, adopted in December 1962. Under the provisions of the constitution, a National Assembly of 50 members was elected, under a limited franchise (see Government, below), in January 1963. In the absence of political parties (which remain illegal), candidates contested the poll as independents, although some opponents of the Government were elected. Also in January 1963, Amir Abdullah appointed his brother, Sheikh Sabah al-Salem al-Sabah (the heir apparent), to be Prime Minister.

In January 1965, as a result of conflict between the paternalistic ruling family and the democratically-inclined National Assembly, the Council of Ministers was strengthened. The Amir died in November 1965, when Sheikh Sabah succeeded to the throne. He was replaced as Prime Minister by his cousin, Sheikh Jaber al-Ahmed al-Sabah, who was also named heir apparent in May 1966. The Neutral Zone (also known as the Partitioned Zone) between Kuwait and Saudi Arabia was formally divided between the two countries in 1969, although revenues from petroleum production in the area are shared equally.

During the 1960s, as Kuwait's output of petroleum increased, the country became increasingly wealthy. The Kuwaiti leadership's policies resulted in extensive redistribution of income, through the use of public expenditure and a land compensation scheme, but there was some popular discontent concerning corruption and official manipulation of the media and the National Assembly. In response to public opinion, a more representative Assembly was elected in January 1971, on the basis of a free vote (though women, illiterates and non-Kuwaitis have no voting rights), and an extensive ministerial reshuffle took place. In January 1975 another general election was held, but in August 1976 Amir Sabah dissolved the National Assembly on the grounds that it was acting against the best interests of the State. The Amir died on 31 December 1977 and was succeeded by Crown Prince Jaber. In January 1978 the new Amir appointed Sheikh Saad al-Abdullah al-Salem al-Sabah to be his heir apparent. The new Crown Prince, formerly the Minister of Defence and the Interior, became Prime Minister in February 1978. In accordance with an Amiri decree of August 1980, a new National Assembly was elected in February 1981, though, of about 6% eligible, only about 3% of the population registered to vote. Of the 50 members elected to the National Assembly in February 1985, 28 were elected for the first time.

Of all the Gulf states, Kuwait has been most vulnerable to regional disruption. Immediately after independence, British troops (soon replaced by an Arab League force) were called in to support the country against a territorial claim by Iraq. The force remained until 1963, and relations between the countries were stable until 1973, when Iraqi troops occupied a Kuwaiti outpost on their joint border. Since then, substantial donations to Iraq have secured Kuwait's territorial security. Kuwait has been active in its support of the Arab cause since the Arab–Israeli war of June 1967, giving financial assistance to 'front-line' Arab countries and major Palestinian organizations. This protected the country from active involvement in the struggle until the Arab–Israeli war of October 1973, when Kuwaiti troops, stationed along the Suez Canal, were involved in fighting. During 1973 and 1974 Kuwait played a leading role in moves to use petroleum as an economic weapon against pro-Israeli Western countries: reducing production, introducing embargoes on supplies to the USA and the Netherlands, and implementing a 70% unilateral price increase. At the Baghdad summit of November 1978, Kuwait called for Arab solidarity in condemning the Camp David agreements between Egypt and Israel, and began to impose sanctions against Egypt. The country has also been an active mediator in regional disputes, helping to bring about the cease-fire between the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen (PDRY) in 1979, and assisting with the 'normalization' agreements between Oman and the PDRY in May 1982.

Since 1973, terrorist acts by extremist groups (not benefiting from Kuwait's donations to individual war efforts) have resulted in sporadic incidents, causing embarrassment to the Government. The most serious of these occurred in December 1983, when six bombs exploded, killing five people and injuring more than 60 people, at the US and French embassies and other strategic sites. Responsibility was claimed by the al-Jihad al-Islami (Islamic Holy War) organization, a group of militant

Shi'a Muslims with widely acknowledged connections in Iran. In December 1984 a Kuwaiti airliner, travelling from Dubai to Karachi, was forced to land in Iran by terrorists who demanded the release of some of those imprisoned, or condemned to death, for their part in the bombings. Increased concern for Kuwait's security was revealed in the arrest or expulsion of numerous Iranian Muslims throughout 1984, and new legal measures were introduced, restricting free passage through the country.

Concern for regional security was a major factor in Kuwait's decision to join five other Gulf states in setting up the Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC, see p.127) in May 1981. In 1983 and 1984 Kuwait took part in the GCC's joint military manoeuvres. The GCC hopes to establish a system of defence for the region, independent of any super-power. In May 1983 Kuwait rejected the USA's peace proposals for Israel and Lebanon. An indication of Kuwait's desire to remain independent of any super-power was its decision, in mid-1984, to purchase armaments from both the USA and the USSR.

Since the outbreak of the Iran–Iraq war in September 1980, Kuwait has given substantial aid to Iraq. Relations with Iran have been maintained despite Iran's bombing of Kuwaiti oil installations at Umm al-Aish in September 1981. In May 1984 two Kuwaiti and several Saudi Arabian tankers were bombed in a series of attacks by unidentified aircraft on shipping in the Gulf. Although both Iran and Iraq were known to have been firing at shipping, Iran was blamed for the attacks on Kuwaiti tankers. These were seen as a warning which would induce Kuwait to put pressure on Iraq to desist from attacking tankers carrying Iranian oil. The GCC withdrew offers to mediate in the Gulf war, and condemned Iran. In December 1984 Kuwait agreed to meet Iraq to resolve outstanding border disputes between the two countries. There were rumours that such agreement would allow Iraq the use of three of Kuwait's islands (Bubyan, Warbah and Failaka) for military purposes.

Government

Under the 1962 Constitution, executive power is vested in the Amir, the Head of State who is chosen by and from members of the ruling family, and is exercised through a Council of Ministers. The Amir appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. Legislative power is vested in a unicameral National Assembly, with 50 elected members who serve for four years (subject to dissolution). Only literate adult male Kuwaiti citizens, excluding members of the armed forces, may vote. This sector comprised only 6.4% of the population in 1981. Political parties are not legally permitted. The country is divided administratively into four districts.

Defence

In July 1984 Kuwait had an army of 10,000 men, an air force of 2,000 men (excluding expatriate personnel), and a navy of about 500 men, manning 61 vessels. Defence expenditure in 1983/84 was estimated at KD 399m. There is an 18-month period of compulsory military service.

Economic Affairs

Kuwait (which means 'little fort') developed initially because it includes an area of slightly higher, firmer ground, giving access from the Gulf inland to Iraq, and because its coastline is indented to provide a reasonably good and sheltered harbour. Kuwait's modern economic prosperity is based on extremely rich deposits of petroleum. The country's proven reserves of petroleum are the third largest in the world, after those of Saudi Arabia and the USSR. Proven reserves in 1981 were estimated at 67,700m. barrels, although further discoveries in September 1984 revealed substantially larger resources. At late 1983 extraction levels, petroleum reserves will not be exhausted for at least 200 years. Petroleum provided about 70% of Kuwait's gross domestic product (GDP) in 1980. The vast revenues which the Kuwaiti Government derives from the petroleum industry have enabled it to establish a highly developed welfare state, with free education and medical services, while imposing no personal income taxes. Despite a rapid increase in population (from about 200,000 in 1957 to more than 1.6m. in 1983), Kuwait's income per person in 1983 was the third highest in the world, exceeded only by the United Arab Emirates and Qatar. According to estimates by the World Bank, gross national product (GNP) per head, measured at average 1980–82 prices, was US $19,870 in 1982. The average annual increase in Kuwait's overall GDP, in real terms, was 5.7% in 1961–70, slowing to 2.1% in 1970–81.

Kuwait began commercial production of petroleum in 1948. The peak level of output was achieved in 1972, when 1,201.6m. barrels of crude oil were produced. The Arab embargo on Western countries, and a desire to restrict production for conservationist reasons, resulted in a decline in output from 1,102.5m. barrels in 1973 to 718.1m. barrels in 1977. The total increased to 911.2m. barrels, about 4.5% of world production, in 1979. During the early 1980s a significant drop was caused by the world oil glut, and Kuwait's annual output fell to only 300.2m. barrels, about 1.5% of world production, in 1982. As a member of OPEC, Kuwait is liable to restrictions on production levels and prices. Its most notable deviation from these regulations occurred in the late 1970s and early 1980s, when it raised the price of its crude petroleum to US $35.50 per barrel, but by March 1983 Kuwait had accepted OPEC's production ceiling of 1.05m. barrels per day (b/d) at the reference price of $29 per barrel. The consequent drop in petroleum revenue was dramatic: from KD 4,251m. in 1980/81 to KD 2,649m. in 1982/83. During the first three-quarters of 1983/84, however, lower prices stimulated demand for petroleum, with the result that production for the period averaged 1.19m. b/d, falling only in the final quarter. Revenues from oil exports reached KD 3,400m. for the year. In late 1983/84 and early 1984/85, however, increased activity in the Gulf War weakened the market for Kuwaiti petroleum, and a production and pricing crisis led, in October 1984, to the imposition of a lower production quota for many OPEC members. Kuwait agreed to a temporary limit of 900,000 b/d; and in November 1984 production averaged 850,000 b/d. Projects to extend the petroleum sector, through the expansion of the existing refinery capacity (from 450,000 b/d in 1983 to 742,000 b/d by 1986), continued, and by late 1983 total capacity had reached 632,000 b/d. It was hoped to raise output of refined products to one-half of total exports by 1984.

In 1981 Kuwait began to expand the petroleum sector by investing overseas, partly to ensure retail outlets for its crude petroleum. The acquisition of a 22.5% interest in Elf Aquitaine's Morocco concession, and of the Santa Fe Corporation in the USA in 1981, provided important 'upstream' facilities for energy exploration and oilfield services, and by 1984 Kuwait had interests in concessions in Australia, Bahrain, the People's Republic of China, Egypt, Oman, the North Sea and the USA. Facilities for the distribution, marketing and retail of refined products have also been expanded. The Kuwait Petroleum Corporation (KPC) has interests in distribution outlets in Hawaii and the Federal Republic of Germany, and in 1983 purchased Gulf Oil's network of about 750 retail petrol stations in Belgium, Denmark, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and Sweden. A British petrol distributor, Pace Petroleum, was also acquired. This was followed in 1984 by the acquisition of about 1,400 of Gulf Oil's petrol stations in Italy, together with three aviation centres, and a 75% interest in a refinery near Milan. The Occidental Petroleum Corporation also sold some of its operations to the Santa Fe International Corporation.

Natural gas, which provided 99% of Kuwait's energy consumption in 1976, has recently become a less important source of energy than petroleum, representing about 25% of the country's total supply by 1983. In order to utilize the natural gas which is associated with crude petroleum, a three-train gas-gathering system and liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) gathering plant was brought into operation in 1979. By 1984 the total capacity of Kuwait's gas-processing plant was 3.7m. metric tons of LPG per year, assuming a crude petroleum production rate of 1.5m. b/d. A further gas project, under development in the south, was expected by 1985 to gather LPG at the rate of 110m. cu ft (3.1m. cu metres) per day. Production of LPG is, however, dependent on levels of petroleum production: plants operated well below capacity in 1982, and output for that year was reduced to 162,728m. cu ft, compared with 223,525m. cu ft in 1981. Increased petroleum output in 1983 led to a rise in LPG production to about 226,200m. cu ft. In view of the fluctuations in demand for both crude petroleum and natural gas, the Government has attempted to diversify its sources of revenue.

There is little drinking water within the country, and supplies are largely distilled from sea water. Deficient soil and water supplies limit the potential for agricultural development, and agriculture contributed only about 0.4% of GDP in 1983. The principal crops are melons, tomatoes, cucumbers and onions. A five-year development plan for agriculture, initiated in 1982, should increase vegetable production to meet 40% of projected demand, compared with about 20% self-sufficiency in 1983. Fishing, particularly of prawns and shrimps, is important, and provided about 23% of domestic consumption, together with some export revenue, in 1983.

To some extent, Kuwait's manufacturing sector is related to the production of petroleum. The country has three fertilizer plants, giving a total capacity of 1.65m. tons per year, mainly in the form of urea and ammonia products. Other important products are cement, paper, packaging materials, melanine, asbestos and pre-fabricated building frames. A chemical plant for the extraction of salt, chlorine and caustic soda from seawater was expected to be operational by 1986. Kuwait has been hesitant to undertake heavy industrial projects, fearing for their viability and the excess of foreign labour which they may demand. Instead, it favours joint projects with Bahrain, Saudi Arabia and other Gulf countries, such as the Gulf Aluminium Rolling Company and the Gulf Petrochemical Industries company. The significance of the manufacturing sector within the economy grew rapidly between 1981/82 (when it represented 4.9% of GDP) and 1982/83, accounting for 6.5% of the total that year. Slower growth during 1983/84 led to a slight decline in its contribution, to 6.4% of GDP.

Another important source of income is investment. As Kuwait had a budget surplus well before 1973, a relatively sophisticated system of investments evolved. At the end of 1979 about two-thirds of Kuwait's assets were held abroad, and income from investments increased from KD $880m. in 1979 to KD $1,600m. by 1983/84. This was important in reducing the ill effects of the reduction in petroleum revenue in 1982/83. Kuwait's official reserves, held by the Central Bank, totalled US $4,950.7m. (excluding gold) at 30 September 1984, compared with $5,913.2m. at the end of 1982. Most interests are held in Japan, the USA, and in Europe, where purchasing is handled by the Kuwaiti Investment Office (KIO). A major feature of Kuwait's economy is the sizeable Reserve for Future Generations, to which 10% of petroleum revenues must, by law, be transferred annually.

During 1983 and 1984 Kuwait was attempting to recover from a financial crisis which developed in September 1982, when the Soukh al-Manakh, an unofficial stock exchange that had been dealing in post-dated cheques, was forced to close as share prices fell at a time when many investors were unable to honour their cheques. Having used the cheques to buy shares at a substantial premium, the total amount payable when the market closed was thought to have reached US $94,000m. In August 1983, having frozen the assets of all involved, the Government introduced legislation to make all cheques immediately payable at a reduced maximum premium of 25%. Imprisonment or fines resulted from a failure to honour these if the individual was capable. Despite these measures, about 400 bankruptcies were thought likely. The price of shares barely rose during the year from the 'support level' maintained by regular injections of government funds. The extent of the damage was becoming visible in late 1984, when the first companies were forced into liquidation. Government support for the shares was ended in April of that year, and interest in the new official stock exchange, which opened in November, was slack. A 40% drop in the market capitalization of quoted companies was expected by the end of the year, and it was thought that about one-half of the share capital traded on the official exchange had been bought by the Government.

Between 1977/78 and 1982/83 the Government aimed to hold budget expenditure steady, in real terms, in order to combat inflation, which in 1982 averaged about 7.5%. As receipts from the petroleum industry represent about 90% of budget revenues, government policy for the implementation of development plans is directly affected by income from this sector. Decreased revenues in 1982/83 led to a proposed increase in expenditure of only 5%, compared with 1981/82, whereas in previous years expenditure had risen by 25% annually. The 1984/85 budget, however, was modestly expansionary, proposing a rise in public development expenditure and an increased deficit. Notwithstanding this proposal, a 'rationalization' programme continued, with new means of reducing expenditure being investigated, including reductions in subsidies. The introduction of charges for some previously free services, including health, was under discussion in 1984.

Kuwait has retained a large trade surplus, although the surplus on the current account of the balance of payments narrowed from US $15,272m. in 1980 to $4,616m. in 1982. The current surplus was further reduced in 1983, to $4,584m., although imports fell and exports rose in that year. Japan and Taiwan were the major markets for Kuwaiti exports in 1982, taking 14.2% and 11.1% of the total, respectively. Iraq took 8.2% of exports in that year, while Iran received 8.1% of the total. About 24% of Kuwait's imports came from Japan, while the Federal Republic of Germany supplied 13.9%, and the USA 12.7%.

Transport and Communications

There are no railways, and no internal air flights. The 3,073 km (1,909 miles) of roads include the dual carriageway from Kuwait City to the border with Iraq. A highway linking Kuwait with Saudi Arabia was completed in 1976, and a motorway system is being developed. Kuwait City, an important Middle Eastern port, is being modernized. Special terminals, principally Mina Al-Ahmadi, facilitate shipments of petroleum by oil tankers. Kuwait has a large merchant-shipping fleet. Kuwait Airways and a number of foreign airlines provide international air services.

Social Welfare

With the help of large government revenues from petroleum, Kuwait has developed a generous system of social benefits and welfare. A comprehensive Public Assistance Law covers all Kuwaitis. In 1983 about 9,000 families benefited under this law. Medical treatment was, at late 1984, free to all residents, and medical teams from Kuwait assist other Arab governments. In 1983 Kuwait had 69 hospital establishments, with a total of 6,952 beds. By the end of 1983 the country had one physician for every 572 inhabitants.

Education

Boys first received formal education, administered by the State, in 1912. Girls' education began in 1936. Although private schools exist, state education is free, and is graded into pre-primary (for children between four and six years of age), primary (for children aged six to 10), intermediate (10 to 14) and secondary (14 to 18). In 1981 an estimated 78% of children in the primary age-group (82% of boys; 74% of girls) were enrolled at primary schools. Enrolment in the intermediate and secondary age-groups was 67% of children in 1979. There is a teacher-training college, a technical college, and a university, from which a total of 12,301 students (7,483 women) graduated between 1969 and 1983. More than 2,000 Kuwaiti students receive education abroad. The development of educational facilities is a high priority, and was allocated KD 350m. in the 1983/84 budget.

Directory

The Constitution

The principal provisions of the Constitution, promulgated on 16 November 1962, are set out below. On 29 August 1976 the Amir suspended four articles of the Constitution dealing with the National Assembly. In early 1980 a 35-member committee was appointed to debate a revised Constitution and presented its recommendation to the Amir. On 24 August 1980 an Amiri Decree was issued, calling for an elected National Assembly before the end of February 1981. The new Assembly was elected on 23 February 1981, and fresh legislative elections followed on 20 February 1985.

SOVEREIGNTY

Kuwait is an independent sovereign Arab State; her sovereignty may not be surrendered, and no part of her territory may be relinquished. Offensive war is prohibited by the Constitution.

Succession as Amir is restricted to heirs of the late MUBARAK AL-SABAH, and an Heir Apparent must be appointed within one year of the accession of a new Amir.

EXECUTIVE AUTHORITY

Executive power is vested in the Amir, who exercises it through a Council of Ministers. The Amir will appoint the Prime Minister 'after the traditional consultations', and will appoint and dismiss ministers on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. Ministers need not be members of the National Assembly, though all ministers who are not Assembly members assume membership ex officio in the Assembly for the duration of office. The Amir also lays down laws, which shall not be effective unless published in the Official Gazette. The Amir sets up public institutions. All decrees issued in these respects shall be conveyed to the Assembly. No law is issued unless it is approved by the Assembly.

LEGISLATURE

A National Assembly of 50 members will be elected for a four-year term by all natural-born literate Kuwait males over the age of 21, except servicemen and police, who may not vote. Candidates for election must possess the franchise and be over 30 years of age. The Assembly will sit for at least eight months in any year, and new elections shall be held within two months of the last dissolution of the outgoing Assembly.

Restrictions on the commercial activities of ministers include an injunction forbidding them to sell property to the Government.

The Amir may ask for reconsideration of a Bill passed by the Assembly and sent to him for ratification, but the Bill would automatically become law if it were subsequently passed by a two-thirds majority at the next sitting, or by a simple majority at a subsequent sitting. The Amir may declare Martial Law, but only with the approval of the Assembly.

The Assembly may pass a vote of no confidence in a minister, in which case the Minister must resign. Such a vote is not permissible in the case of the Prime Minister, but the Assembly may approach the Amir on the matter, and the Amir shall then either dismiss the Prime Minister or dissolve the Assembly.

An annual budget shall be presented, and there shall be an independent finance control commission.

CIVIL SERVICE

Entry to the civil service is confined to Kuwait citizens.

PUBLIC LIBERTIES

Kuwaitis are equal before the law in prestige, rights and duties. Individual freedom is guaranteed. No one shall be seized, arrested or exiled except within the rules of law.

No punishment shall be administered except for an act or abstaining from an act considered a crime in accordance with a law applicable at the time of committing it, and no penalty shall be imposed more severe than that which could have been imposed at the time of committing the crime.

Freedom of opinion is guaranteed to everyone, and each has the right to express himself through speech, writing or other means within the limits of the law.

The Press is free within the limits of the law, and it should not be suppressed except in accordance with the dictates of law.

Freedom of performing religious rites is protected by the State according to prevailing customs, provided it does not violate the public order and morality.

Trade unions will be permitted and property must be respected. An owner is not banned from managing his property except within the boundaries of law. No property should be taken from anyone, except within the prerogatives of law, unless a just compensation be given.

Houses may not be entered, except in cases provided by law. Every Kuwaiti has freedom of movement and choice of place of residence within the state. This right shall not be controlled except in cases stipulated by law.

Every person has the right to education and freedom to choose his type of work. Freedom to form peaceful societies is guaranteed within the limits of law.

Judicial System

Kuwait adopted a unified judicial system, covering all levels of courts, in 1960. Until then, a single Islamic court and committees in the public security departments had settled public disputes and commercial differences. In 1982 a total of 46 advisers, 82 judges and 65 prosecutors considered 11,000 felonies, misdemeanours and appeals and 11,000 penal offences (offences under the private labour law and the law of commerce and the municipality).

The different types of court operating in Kuwait are as follows:

Courts of Summary Justice: This judges commercial and civil misdemeanours, allegations and disputes and urgent matters, providing that they are not worth more than KD1,000. The court's rulings are final if the sum is no more than KD500. Should the fine exceed that amount, appeal may be made to the Appellate Department in the Court of the First Instance. The Court of the First Instance passed judgment on 8,467 cases in 1982.

Courts of the First Instance: This judges lawsuits worth more than KD1,000. It considers disputes related to personal, civil, commercial, labour and rent affairs, and also hears cases of felony and appeals concerning misdemeanours. The Court of the First Instance heard 19,000 cases and 182 appeals in 1982.

Supreme Court of Appeal: This hears appeals against rulings of the Court of Cassation, and its verdicts are passed by three advisers. The Supreme Court of Appeal heard a total of 2,605 appeals in 1982.

Court of Cassation: This is an independent department in the Supreme Court of Appeal. It considers cases of alleged discrimination, be they commercial labour, civil, personal or criminal. In 1982 the Court of Cassation heard 929 cases.

Constitutional Court: Composed of five advisers, this court interprets the articles of the constitution and judges disputes related to the constitutionality of laws, statutes, and by-laws, and challenges to the election and true membership of deputies in the National Assembly.

State Security Court: Composed of three judges, this court hears crimes against state security or any other crimes referred to it by the Council of Ministers.

Ministry of Justice: POB 6, Safat; District Courts: tel. 432131; High Court of Appeal: tel. 432131.

Public Prosecutor: Faris Abdul Rahman al-Waqyan.

SHIPPING

Kuwait has three commercial seaports. The largest, Shuwaikh, situated about 3 km from Kuwait City, was built in 1960. By 1983 it comprised 21 berths, with a total length of 4 km. A total of 1,766 vessels passed through the port in 1983, discharging 6.2m. tons of goods. Expansion, under way in 1984, included a project to increase the number of berths to 43.

Shuaiba Commercial Port, 54 km south of Kuwait City, was built in 1967 to facilitate the import of primary materials and heavy equipment, necessary for the construction of the Shuaiba Industrial Area. By 1983 the port comprised a total of 20 berths, plus two docks for small wooden boats. Four of the berths constitute a station for unloading containers. Total traffic tonnage in 1982 was about 7m. tons.

Doha, the smallest port, was equipped in 1981 to receive small coastal ships carrying light goods between the Gulf States. It has 20 small berths, each 100m long. Expansion to facilitate the transport of heavier industrial products within the Gulf was being considered in 1984.

The oil port at Mina Al-Ahmadi, 40 km south of Kuwait City, is capable of handling the largest oil tankers afloat, and the loading of over 2m. barrels of oil per day.

LAOS

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Lao People's Democratic Republic is a land-locked country in South-East Asia, bordered by the People's Republic of China to the north, by Viet-Nam to the east, by Kampuchea to the south, by Thailand to the west and by Burma to the north-west. The climate is tropical, with a rainy monsoon season lasting from May to October. The official language, Lao or Laotian, is spoken by about two-thirds of the population. French is spoken widely and there are also numerous tribal languages, including Meo. The principal religion is Buddhism. There are also some Christians and followers of animist beliefs. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three horizontal stripes, of red, blue (half the depth) and red, with a white disc in the centre. The capital is Vientiane.

Recent History

Laos was formerly a part of French Indo-China and comprised the three principalities of Luang Prabang, Vientiane and Champassac. These were merged in 1946, when France recognized Sisavang Vong, ruler of Luang Prabang since 1904, as King of Laos. In May 1947 the King promulgated a democratic constitution, though until 1957 only men were allowed to vote. The Kingdom of Laos became independent, within the French Union, in July 1949 and full sovereignty was recognized by France in October 1953. The leading royalist politician was Prince Souvanna Phouma, who was Prime Minister in 1951–54, 1956–58, 1960 and from 1962 to 1975. King Sisavang Vong died in October 1959 and was succeeded by his son, Savang Vatthana.

From 1950 the Royal Government was opposed by the Lao Patriotic Front (LPF), an insurgent movement formed by a group of former anti-French activists. The LPF's Chairman was Prince Souphanouvong, a half-brother of Prince Souvanna Phouma, but its dominant element was the communist People's Party of Laos (PPL), led by Kaysone Phomvihane. The LPF's armed forces became known as the Pathet Lao. During the 1950s the Pathet Lao gradually secured control of the north-east of the country with the assistance of the Vietnamese communists, the Viet-Minh, engaged in war with the French (until 1954). Several agreements between the Royal Government and the LPF, attempting to end the guerrilla war and reunite the country, failed during the 1950s and early 1960s. By 1965 the de facto partition of Laos was established, with the LPF refusing to participate in national elections, and consolidating its power over the north-eastern provinces.

With the 'Ho Chi Minh Trail', the communist supply route to South Viet-Nam, running through the Pathet Lao-controlled areas, Laos remained closely involved with the war in Viet-Nam. In 1973 the Viet-Nam peace negotiations included provisions for a cease-fire in Laos. A new Government was set up in April 1974 with Royalist, neutralist and LPF participation and with Prince Souvanna Phouma continuing as Prime Minister and Prince Souphanouvong becoming Chairman of the Joint National Political Council. However, the LPF increased its power and eventually gained effective control, which was confirmed by election victories in October and November 1975. In November King Savang Vatthana abdicated and Souvanna Phouma resigned.

In December 1975 a National Congress of People's Representatives (264 delegates elected by local authorities) abolished the monarchy and elected a 45-member Supreme People's Council (now known as the Supreme People's Assembly). Souphanouvong was appointed President of the newly-named Lao People's Democratic Republic and President of the Supreme People's Council. Kaysone Phomvihane, who had become Secretary-General of the Lao People's Revolutionary Party (LPRP, a successor to the PPL), was appointed Prime Minister. Ex-King Savang Vatthana was named Supreme Counsellor to the President but he refused to co-operate with the new regime and was arrested in March 1977. The LPF was replaced in February 1979 by the Lao Front for National Reconstruction, under the leadership of the LPRP.

The Third Congress of the LPRP took place in April 1982, confirming the party leadership and increasing the membership of the Secretariat and Central Committee. In September the Council of Ministers was reorganized and several ministries restructured.

Armed opposition to the Government continues, particularly among hill tribes. In October 1982 Gen. Phoumi Nosavan, a Lao exile, formed the anti-communist Royal Lao Democratic Government, led by former Laotian military officers. However, many prominent exiles have dissociated themselves from the movement.

Since 1975 Laos has been heavily dependent on Vietnamese economic and military assistance. In July 1977 a 25-year treaty of friendship between the two countries was signed, and Laos supported the Vietnamese-backed take-over in Kampuchea in January 1979. Following the outbreak of hostilities between Viet-Nam and the People's Republic of China in February, Laos allied itself with the former, and several Chinese aid projects were subsequently suspended.

Between 1975 and 1977 relations with Thailand were strained. Thailand intermittently closed the border to Lao imports and exports, causing considerable hardship. However, with the fall of the militantly anti-communist Government in Thailand in October 1977, there was an improvement in relations and the blockade of goods was lifted. In 1979 agreements providing for border liaison and trade co-operation were signed. Following a number of border incidents in 1980, relations cooled again, and Thailand closed all but three of its border points. During 1983 a Thai foreign affairs committee advocated the resumption of trade across the border, and the opening of more crossings, but the proposals were not well received in Bangkok, and restrictions on the sale of many goods to Laos remain in force.

Relations with Thailand reached a low ebb in May 1984, following a clash between Thai and Laotian troops in an area at their joint border which was the subject of a dispute. Both countries claimed control over three villages. Tension increased after discussions over the dispute broke down in September, and there were further clashes between Laotian and Thai troops. At the beginning of 1985 the disagreement over the three villages remained unresolved.

Government

In December 1975 a National Congress of People's Representatives proclaimed a republic. The Congress installed a President as Head of State and a Council of Ministers, led by a Prime Minister, to exercise executive power. A Supreme People's Assembly of 45 members, chaired by the President, was appointed to draft a new constitution.

Political power is held by the Lao People's Revolutionary Party (LPRP). The communist LPRP has a Central Committee with 49 full and six alternate members, headed by a seven-member Political Bureau.

Defence

In July 1984 the estimated strength of the armed forces was 53,700 (Lao People's Army 50,000, navy 1,700, air force 2,000). In 1981 defence expenditure totalled an estimated 260m. kips. In 1984 there were about 50,000 Vietnamese troops in Laos.

Economic Affairs

The essentially agricultural Laotian economy was severely disrupted by the years of civil war. Agriculture employs about 80% of the labour force, and annual production is heavily dependent on the weather. The principal crop is rice but Laos has often had to rely on rice imports, mainly from Thailand, to make up annual shortfalls. In 1976 and 1977 drought and crop pests seriously affected agricultural production, further reduced by severe flooding in 1978. In 1984 the output of paddy rice was a record 1.3m. tons, bringing Laos almost to a position of self-sufficiency. About 30,000 tons of rice were imported in 1982 and 1983. The shortfall increased to 110,000 tons in 1984. Sweet potatoes, cassava and maize are also grown.

Forests cover about two-thirds of Laos. Timber production has increased slowly, with output reportedly back to pre-war levels. Exports of timber and forest products, however, declined in value from US $7m. in 1974 to $1.4m. in 1976/77.

Laos has considerable mineral resources, including deposits of tin, lead, zinc, coal, potash, gypsum, iron ore, and small quantities of gold, silver and precious stones. Of these, only tin has been exploited on a significant scale, with two open-cast mines in operation. Tin production has fluctuated; 417 metric tons were produced in 1980 and 352 tons in 1983, compared with 787 tons in 1972. Petroleum deposits are believed to exist in the Vientiane valley. Laos has been largely dependent on Thailand for imports of petroleum. In May 1983, however, an agreement was signed to provide for the construction of a 395-km oil pipeline between Vientiane and Da Nang in Viet-Nam. The pipeline will eventually link up with a 100-km pipeline leading from the Vietnamese port of Vinh to the Laotian border, and will supply Laos with 300,000 metric tons of petroleum and gas per annum. There is considerable potential for the development of hydroelectricity, particularly the Nam Ngum generating station. A fifth generator was installed in 1984, increasing the station's capacity to 150,000 kW. About 90% of its output, or approximately 600m. kWh annually, is exported to Thailand under a 10-year agreement. Electricity is the principal earner of foreign exchange; sales to Thailand were valued at US $21m. in 1982, compared with $8m. in 1981. As domestic electricity demand increases, the Government plans to develop a new station, probably at Nam Theun, to prevent loss of export earnings. Manufacturing is relatively undeveloped, accounting for less than 5% of the country's gross domestic product (GDP), and is mainly confined to the processing of raw materials and agricultural produce, and the production of handicrafts and basic consumer goods for the home market.

The chronic balance-of-trade deficit, approximately 32,000m. old kips in 1974, used to be largely financed by US aid. Following the closure of the US aid mission in June 1975, Laos has become increasingly dependent on assistance from the USSR, Viet-Nam and the East European bloc, as well as from international organizations, although substantial aid is received from Western countries, such as Sweden, and also from Japan. For the period 1979–82 the value of project aid was forecast to total over US $400m. The trade deficit exceeded $100m. in 1980 and 1981. There are few exports; electricity, timber, tin and coffee account for all official trade, but there is a significant amount of smuggling of coffee, opium and timber and forest products into Thailand to pay for imports such as generally unavailable consumer goods. In 1982 total official imports were about $90m., while exports were about $46m. Most trade is with Japan and Thailand.

In June 1976, in an attempt to curb the high rate of inflation, a new currency, the 'liberation kip', was introduced, with an official exchange rate of 200 to the US dollar. However, by November the unofficial rate was about 1,400 to the dollar and inflation continued at a high rate. In May 1978 the liberation kip was devalued by 50%. In December 1979 a currency reform introduced the new kip, equivalent to 100 old kips, but at the same time the currency was devalued by 75%. In January 1980, however, the new kip was revalued from 16 to 10 bank kips per US dollar. The currency was devalued by 67% in 1981, when the exchange rate was set at US $1 = 30 kips. A further devaluation occurred in 1982, when a rate of 35 kips per dollar was introduced.

The economy improved in 1980 and GDP rose by 10%, higher levels of domestic production led to an improved supply situation and the balance-of-payments deficit was reduced. According to the ADB, real growth of the gross national product was at an annual average rate of 6.5% during 1979–82. In 1980 a programme to increase domestic production, to encourage exports and to promote efficient import use was affected by Thailand's closure of the common border. In 1982 the per caput income was estimated at more than $100.

The Government's principal aim is to develop agriculture and forestry as the basis for future industrial development. In June 1978, in an attempt to increase production, the Government introduced a programme of agricultural collectivization, and 2,113 co-operatives had been established by the end of 1983. In 1980 these measures were scaled down as being unsuited to the existing economic system. However, with the State retaining the most powerful role in the economy, no return to free capitalism was envisaged, but rather a channelling of the benefits of free trading for the collective good. The 1981–85 Plan aimed to achieve self-sufficiency in food, further development of exports, improvements in productivity and a better standard of living. The first year of the Plan saw an overall increase of 8.6% in total production.

Transport and Communications

Laos is a land-locked country, and the Mekong River and its left-bank tributaries form the principal artery of transport. However, the size of river vessels is limited by rapids, and traffic is seasonal. There are no railways in Laos but in September 1976 an official communiqué confirmed that studies would be undertaken for the construction of a railway link between Laos and Viet-Nam. In 1979 there were about 16,750 km of roads. Lao Aviation operates services to Thailand, Viet-Nam and Kampuchea from Wattai airport, at Vientiane.

Social Welfare

In 1983 there were 639 hospitals and clinics, with a total of 9,495 beds. There were also 1,654 doctors and physicians.

Education

Education was greatly disrupted by the civil war, causing a high illiteracy rate, but educational facilities have since improved significantly. Primary education begins at six years of age and lasts for five years. Secondary education, beginning at the age of 11, lasts for six years. The illiteracy rate was reportedly reduced from 60% in 1975 to 25% by 1979. Over the same period, the enrolment ratio at primary schools rose from 61% to 96% of children in the relevant age-group, while secondary enrolment increased from 7% to 17%.

Public Holiday

1985: 2 December (National Day).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

100 at = 1 new kip.

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = 40.565 new kips;
US $1 = 35.000 new kips.

LEBANON

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Lebanon lies in western Asia, bordered by Syria to the north and east, and by Israel to the south. The country has a coastline of about 220 km (135 miles) on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean Sea. The climate varies widely with altitude. The coastal lowlands are hot and humid in summer, becoming mild (cool and damp) in winter. In the mountains, which occupy much of Lebanon, the weather is cool in summer, with heavy snowfalls in winter. Rainfall is generally abundant. The official language is Arabic, which is spoken by almost all of the inhabitants. French is widely used as a second language, while Kurdish and Armenian are spoken by small ethnic minorities. About 10% of the population are Arab refugees from Palestine. The major religions are Islam and Christianity, and there is a very small Jewish community. In the early 1980s it was estimated that 57% of Lebanon's inhabitants were Muslims, with about 43% Christians. The principal Muslim sects are the Sunni and Shi'a, while there is also a significant Druze (Druse) community. Most of the Christians adhere to the Roman Catholic Church, principally the Maronite rite. There are also Armenian, Greek and Syrian sects (both Catholic and Eastern Orthodox), and small groups of Protestants. By the 1980s it was widely believed that the Shi'a Muslims, totalling an estimated 1.2m., constituted Lebanon's largest single community. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three horizontal stripes, of red, white (half the depth) and red, with a representation of a cedar tree (in green and brown) in the centre of the white stripe. The capital is Beirut.

Recent History

Lebanon, the homeland of the ancient Phoenicians, became part of Turkey's Ottoman Empire in the 16th century. During the First World War (1914–18), in which Turkey was allied with Germany, the Arabs under Ottoman rule rebelled. In 1918 British and French forces invaded Lebanon and, with Arab help, expelled the Turks. At the end of the war, following Turkey's defeat, the Ottoman Empire was dissolved. Lebanon was administered by France, under a League of Nations mandate, from 1920 until independence was declared on 26 November 1941. A republic was established in 1943, and full autonomy was granted to the new state in January 1944. All foreign troops left the country by December 1946.

Unlike most Arab countries, Lebanon is characterized by great religious and cultural diversity. When the republic was established, the various communities agreed on a delicate balance of power as a means of avoiding mutual hostility. The unwritten 'national pact' of 1943 provided for a sharing of executive and legislative functions in the ratio of six Christians to five Muslims. It was agreed that the distribution of seats in the Chamber of Deputies (renamed the National Assembly in 1979) would be on a religious, rather than an ideological, basis. There is a convention that the President of Lebanon is a Maronite Christian, while the Prime Minister is a Sunni Muslim. Political parties have usually been identified with particular religious affiliations, and attempts to form national parties have met with little success.

For many years, however, Lebanon's various Christian and Muslim groups generally coexisted in a spirit of tolerance and harmony. The country never participated actively in the Arab–Israeli wars, but the influx into southern Lebanon of Palestinian Arabs, mostly Muslim refugees from those wars, disturbed the balance between the religions and involved Lebanon in the wider regional conflict. The arrival of the Palestinians, and the indigenous Muslims' higher rate of population increase, resulted in approximate parity between Christians and Muslims, and it is generally believed that Muslims constituted a majority of Lebanon's population by the 1970s. Nevertheless, the tradition of moderation survived an internal crisis in 1958 (see below). Domestic tranquillity was restored, and peaceful coexistence continued, with a few interruptions, until 1975, since when there has been bitter conflict between the various communities. The relative stability of Lebanon until the mid-1970s enabled the country to become the commercial and financial centre of the Middle East. However, the business district of Beirut was largely destroyed in 1975–76, and it has remained in ruins during the subsequent civil strife. As a result of continuing violence and political uncertainty, Lebanon's role as a trading centre has greatly diminished.

Lebanon's first President was Sheikh Bishara el-Khoury. He held office from 1943 until resigning, after allegations of corruption, in 1952. His successor was Camille Chamoun, who granted votes to women and adopted a pro-Western foreign policy. Following elections to the Chamber of Deputies in 1957, there was considerable unrest, mainly among Muslims who favoured policies of Arab nationalism, particularly a closer alignment with Egypt and Syria. By 1958 civil disturbances had grown into a full-scale insurrection, with Muslim and Christian forces in conflict. In July 1958, near the end of his term of office, President Chamoun appealed to the USA for military assistance. US forces, totalling about 10,000 men, quickly arrived in Beirut and remained until October, by which time peace had been restored. Meanwhile, the Chamber elected Gen. Fuad Chehab, commander of the armed forces, to be the next President. He held office until 1964 and was followed by Charles Hélou (1964–70) and Sulaiman Franjiya (1970–76).

After the establishment of Israel in 1948, Lebanon accepted thousands of Palestinian refugees, many of whom settled in camps in southern Lebanon. The country also joined in the Arab policy of boycotting Israel. The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), founded in 1964, had its headquarters in Beirut, until the events of mid-1982 caused the removal of the PLO leadership to Tunis. Lebanon's policy of allowing PLO guerrilla forces to have bases within the country, from which raids were made into Israel, has been the main cause of Israeli involvement in Lebanon.

The presence of Palestinian guerrilla groups in Lebanon, and the consequent Israeli reprisals, caused security problems for successive Lebanese governments and led to frequent Cabinet crises, as the authorities' attempts to curb guerrilla activity were generally ineffective. In December 1968 Israeli commandos raided Beirut airport and destroyed 13 aircraft, in retaliation for an Arab terrorist attack on an Israeli airliner in Athens. As a result of the Beirut raid, the Lebanese Cabinet resigned in January 1969. Thereafter, Lebanon became increasingly split over the question of support for the Palestinian guerrillas (fedayeen). Following the expulsion of the fedayeen from Jordan in July 1971, the bases in Lebanese refugee camps became increasingly important to Palestinian guerrilla groups. Their operations against Israel in the 1970s were met by violent reprisals, with the villages of southern Lebanon, in particular, suffering damage and casualties as a result of Israeli raids and shelling. In February 1973 Israeli forces killed three high-ranking Palestinian guerrilla leaders in Beirut. This attack led to the downfall of another Lebanese Cabinet in April.

The continuing violence involving the fedayeen and Israeli forces led to increased tension between Palestinian guerrillas and members of the Phalangist Party (the Phalanges Libanaises, also known as al-Kata'eb), a militant right-wing Maronite Christian group, founded and led by Pierre Gemayel. Phalangist and Palestinian forces clashed in July 1974, with the Phalangists demanding that the Lebanese Government should control guerrilla activities. The Cabinet, unable to control sectarian violence, resigned in September.

An incident in April 1975 led to more serious fighting between Phalangists and Palestinians in Beirut, and to the fall of another Cabinet in May. However, the conflict continued, and quickly developed into full-scale civil war between the religious communities, with the 'National Movement' of left-wing Muslims (including Palestinians), led by Kamal Joumblatt of the Progressive Socialist Party, in conflict with conservative Christian groups, mainly the Phalangist militia. The underlying reason for the war was the widely held belief that the population balance, which favoured the Christians when the allocation of political and administrative posts was agreed in 1943, had shifted in favour of the Muslims, who thus felt under-represented. Also, the Muslims identify with the Arab and Islamic world, while the Christians look towards the West. Numerous attempts to mediate in the civil war were made by Arab and Western states, and more than 50 cease-fires proved abortive until Arab summit meetings in Riyadh and Cairo secured a more durable cease-fire in October 1976.

Syrian intervention played an important part in the conflict. Syrian mediation secured a temporary cease-fire in January 1976, and Syrian forces intervened from April 1976 onwards. By mid-1976 Syrian troops were committed against the Palestinian guerrillas, and an Arab Peace-keeping Force, under the sponsorship of the Arab League, failed to stop the fighting. A more effective 30,000-strong Arab Deterrent Force (ADF), composed mainly of Syrian troops, arrived as a result of the cease-fire in October 1976 and, for a short time, prevented the renewal of full-scale fighting. Spasmodic clashes, however, continued in the south of the country, near the Israeli border. In spite of the Shtoura Agreement of July 1977, which endeavoured to regulate the Palestinian base camps and to introduce a reconstituted Lebanese army into the border area, there was renewed fighting in March 1978, when a raid by forces of the Palestine National Liberation Movement (Fatah), the main guerrilla group within the PLO, provoked Israeli retaliation. Israeli forces advanced into southern Lebanon, but the UN Security Council effected an Israeli withdrawal and set up a UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), initially of 4,000 troops, to maintain peace. The withdrawing Israeli forces, however, handed over to a right-wing, mainly Christian, Lebanese militia who maintained links with the Israelis.

After renewed fighting in Beirut between Syrian troops of the ADF and right-wing Christian militias, the Foreign Ministers of the ADF states met at Beiteddin, near Beirut, and agreed in late 1978 on a declaration which was aimed at bringing peace to Lebanon. It maintained that the authority of the Lebanese Government must be imposed, that armed militias must be curbed, and that a truly national army must be formed. Attempts by the Lebanese Government to implement the Beiteddin Declaration and later Arab resolutions met with little success. In April 1979 Major Saad Haddad, a right-wing Lebanese army officer who enjoyed Israeli support, declared an area of 1,800 sq km (700 sq miles) in the south of the country to be 'independent free Lebanon'. In July 1980 the Phalangist militia overcame the militia of the National Liberal Party, a rival right-wing Maronite group (led by ex-President Chamoun), and dominated the area north of Beirut. In April 1981 Syrian troops laid siege to the Phalangist-occupied town of Zahleh, and a major crisis developed when Israel threatened to destroy the Soviet-built surface-to-air missiles which Syria had introduced. The siege was lifted at the end of June, after mediation by the Saudi Arabian and Kuwaiti Ambassadors, and a cease-fire was agreed in July.

President Sulaiman Franjiya was succeeded by Elias Sarkis in September 1976. Rashid Karami had been Prime Minister throughout the 1975–76 civil war, but he was succeeded by Dr Selim Hoss and a government of eight technocrats in December 1976. Dr Hoss introduced a new 12-member Cabinet in July 1979, but offered his resignation in June 1980 on the grounds that no progress had been made towards political accord. It was not until October 1980 that a new Cabinet was formed, with Chafic al-Wazzan as Prime Minister. Elections to the Chamber of Deputies (later renamed the National Assembly), due in April 1976, were postponed for up to 26 months. The term of the Assembly was subsequently extended further. In spite of the Israeli invasion (see below), the Assembly voted in August 1982 to choose a successor to President Sarkis, whose term expired on 23 September. The election, boycotted by most of the Assembly's Muslim members, was won by Bachir Gemayel, the youngest son of Pierre Gemayel, leader of the Phalangist Party. However, the President-elect, who was commander of the Phalangist militia, was assassinated on 14 September. His brother, Amin, was then elected President, and asked Chafic al-Wazzan to continue as Prime Minister. On 7 October Wazzan introduced a Cabinet of 10 ministers, drawn from outside the National Assembly, and in November the Assembly granted Wazzan the power to rule by decree for six months.

In the spring of 1982, infringements of the cease-fire, imposed in the previous July, became more frequent, and in June 1982 Israeli forces moved into Lebanon on 'Operation Peace for Galilee'. The initially limited objective of the incursion soon escalated into a war to crush the PLO. Israeli forces surrounded West Beirut, trapping more than 6,000 Palestinian fighters. In late August Philip Habib, the Middle East envoy of US President Ronald Reagan, secured an agreement which brought about the dispersal of the PLO fighters from Beirut to various Arab countries, and the arrival of a multinational peace force. The Israeli invasion met with international disapproval, and Israel was further condemned for allowing a massacre to take place in the Sabra and Chatila refugee camps in mid-September, when several hundred Palestinians were killed.

Exhaustive talks between Israel and Lebanon, begun in December 1982, culminated in the signing on 17 May 1983 of a 12-article agreement, formulated by US Secretary of State George Shultz, declaring an end to hostilities and calling for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon within three months. Syria refused to recognize the agreement (which was never ratified by President Amin Gemayel), leaving 40,000 of its troops and 7,000 PLO men encamped in the Beka'a Valley and northern Lebanon. Israel consequently refused to withdraw its own forces from the south but, in September 1983, those troops (30,000 men, reduced to 10,000 by the end of the year) were redeployed south of Beirut, along the Awali river. Members of Major Saad Haddad's militia, the so-called 'South Lebanon army' (SLA), were employed to police the southern Israeli-controlled area of what was effectively a partitioned country. Meanwhile, owing to a lack of co-ordination between the departing Israelis and the Lebanese Army, a full-scale war flared up between the Druze and Phalangist militias in the vacated Chouf mountains. Fighting continued into October, with the Druzes forcing the Christians out of the region and establishing what was virtually a Druze mini-state, with its own executive council and local administration.

The 5,800-strong multinational force (2,000 French, 2,000 Italians, 1,600 Americans and about 100 British), left to keep the peace between the various factions in Beirut, was gradually drawn into the fighting, coming under attack from Muslim militiamen who were suspicious of its role in supporting a Christian-led Government and of the presence offshore of massive, predominantly American, naval support. In the two most devastating incidents, 241 US and 58 French marines were killed in almost simultaneous suicide bombings, carried out by Muslim fanatics on 23 October 1983.

From September 1983 the fight for control of Fatah between the forces of its leader, Yasser Arafat (Chairman of the PLO), and those of Syrian-backed rebels, under Abu Musa and Abu Saleh, was concentrated around Arafat's last stronghold, the northern Lebanese port of Tripoli. After months of bitter fighting, a truce allowed Arafat to leave Tripoli in December with about 4,000 of his supporters, aboard five Greek ships, under UN protection, on their way to Algeria, Tunisia and the Yemen Arab Republic.

In Beirut, inter-factional fighting was punctuated by numerous short-lived cease-fires. The most successful of these began on 26 September and was accompanied by the resignation of Chafic al-Wazzan, who hoped to make way for a government of national unity. He was persuaded to remain in office, but these events were the prelude to a Conference of National Reconciliation, held in Geneva from 31 October to 4 November. These talks were attended by most of the interested Lebanese parties, including the Shi'ite Amal militia, led by Nabih Berri, and the representatives of the Syrian-backed National Salvation Front, proclaimed in July 1983 by the Druze leader Walid Joumblatt (the son of Kamal Joumblatt, who was assassinated in 1977) in alliance with ex-President Franjiya, a pro-Syrian Maronite, and former Prime Minister Rashid Karami. However, the conference effectively foundered on President Gemayel's refusal to do more than 'freeze' the 17 May agreement with Israel, rather than to abrogate the pact (as Syria wished), because of his fear of losing American support. Broad agreement was reached, however, on the need for constitutional changes that would give Muslims representation in the Government which was proportionate to their majority status in the population. In early February 1984, following abortive Saudi-mediated attempts to implement a comprehensive security agreement, fighting flared up on an even more intense level than before. To the Muslim community, the reconstituted Lebanese army, trained and armed by the USA, appeared to be nothing more than an instrument for use against them by the Christian President, in support of the Phalangist militia. Amin Gemayel had refused to give Nabih Berri, the leader of Amal, a post in the Cabinet, while Walid Joumblatt was committed to the President's removal. Muslim members of the army, unwilling to fight against their own communities, began to defect to the militias, while the Druze and Shi'ite sects co-operated in fighting government forces. The Sunni Muslim Prime Minister Wazzan and the entire Cabinet resigned on 5 February. Shortly afterwards, the USA, Italy and the United Kingdom decided to withdraw their peace-keeping troops from the multinational force (the French troops left in March).

On 16 February, with West Beirut in Shi'ite hands, with the army sustaining defeats south of the capital and with his Government in effective control only of the eastern part of the city, Amin Gemayel offered to abrogate the 17 May agreement with Israel, and to give greater government representation to the Muslims. President Gemayel also called for a UN peace-keeping force to replace the multinational one, while a government of national unity began to institute the planned reforms. These proposals, conditional on the simultaneous withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon, proved to be unacceptable, not only to Syria and to Gemayel's Muslim opponents in Lebanon but also to the Christian parties which were committed to the agreement with Israel.

Finally, on 5 March, bowing to Syria's influence in Lebanese affairs, President Gemayel abrogated the 17 May agreement in return for guarantees of internal security from President Assad of Syria. On the same day, Chafic al-Wazzan's Cabinet withdrew its resignation, and one week later the National Reconciliation Conference was reconvened in Lausanne, Switzerland. The meeting failed to produce the results for which Syria had hoped, and it saw the beginning of the disintegration of the Lebanese National Salvation Front. A representative of the Front, ex-President Sulaiman Franjiya, vetoed Syrian plans for constitutional changes in Lebanon which involved the diminution of the powers of the President, traditionally a Maronite Christian post. The conference broke up, having agreed another cease-fire and recommended only the formation of a government of national unity, not its composition. (A grouping of opposition leaders to replace the defunct National Salvation Front, called the Democratic National Front, was formed in August 1984, including Walid Joumblatt, Georges Hawi of the Lebanese Communist Party, Assem Qansou of the Baath Party and Inaam Raad of the Syrian Nationalist Party, but not Nabih Berri of Amal.)

In April 1984 President Assad of Syria approved plans, put to him by President Gemayel, for a Lebanese Government of National Unity, giving equal representation to Christians and Muslims. Rashid Karami, who had held the post on 10 previous occasions, was appointed Prime Minister of the new government, which was proclaimed on 30 April, with the aims of ending the Israeli occupation of the south, restoring civil order and reforming the Constitution to reflect the majority status of Lebanon's Muslim population. Karami announced a 10-man Cabinet, comprising five Christians and five Muslims. Nabih Berri, who was appointed Minister of Water and Electrical Resources and of Justice, refused to participate in the Government until a ministry of state for the affairs of the (predominantly Shi'ite) area of southern Lebanon, occupied by Israel, had been created. Such a ministry was duly created, and Berri was appointed to it on 7 May. Ex-President Franjiya, who was bitterly opposed to the presence in the Cabinet of Pierre Gemayel and Camille Chamoun, refused to support the Government, and his Greek Orthodox son-in-law, Abdullah al-Rassi (Minister of the Interior), boycotted Cabinet meetings in sympathy. The new Cabinet was approved by the National Assembly in June.

The Syrian Vice-President for Political Affairs, Abdel Halim Khaddam, intervened to mediate between the warring militias, and secured a cease-fire which allowed the terms of a security plan for Beirut, providing for the reorganization of the army and the disengagement of the rival militias, to be drawn up. An all-party Military Council, made up of one member from each main religious group, was formed to supervise the reintegration of the 37,000-strong army and the disengagement of the militias. Brig.-Gen. Michel Awn, a Maronite Christian, was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, while a Druze, Maj.-Gen. Nadim Hakim, was appointed Chief of Staff. (Maj.-Gen. Hakim was killed in a helicopter crash in August, and replaced by Maj.-Gen. Abu Dirgham.) A new body, the Directorate of Internal Security, was placed under the control of a Shi'ite general, Uthman Uthman. It was decided that, in future, army posts would be distributed equally among the religious groups. The security plan was put into operation at the beginning of July, and met virtually no opposition. The port and airport of Beirut, which had both been closed since February, were reopened in mid-July, and more crossing points on the so-called 'Green Line', separating the Christian and Muslim sectors of Beirut, were cleared.

The security plan met with limited success. Muslim and Druze dissatisfaction with the Government's lack of progress on constitutional reform, despite the Syrian influence on President Gemayel, led to sporadic fighting between rival Muslim and Christian militias and, occasionally, between Shi'ite and Sunni Muslims belonging, respectively, to the Amal and Murabitoun militias. Troops of the Lebanese Army failed to gain control of the city, though they reduced fighting along the 'Green Line'. President Gemayel's efforts to gain agreement on constitutional reform, already constrained by his fear of alienating his Christian supporters, were further handicapped by disagreements within the Cabinet. Walid Joumblatt kept up a torrent of vituperation against Gemayel, and vetoed the extension of the security plan in September along the southern coastal road and into the Druze bastion of the Chouf mountains, as he regarded the Lebanese Army as simply a tool of the Christian Phalangists.

In September 1984 the Cabinet, which was agreed on the principle of increasing the number of members in the National Assembly from 99 to allow an equal representation for Christians and Muslims, appeared to have approved a total membership of 122 but then failed to reach agreement on the number of members who would represent the various groups within the two major religious communities. Joseph Hashim, who became Minister of Posts, Telecommunications, Health and Social Affairs in September (succeeding Pierre Gemayel, who had died in August), caused further protest by demanding that the Maronite Christians form the largest single group in the Assembly. A 40-member committee, representing Muslims and Christians in equal numbers, was appointed to draw up proposals for political reforms. Ex-President Franjiya agreed to be represented on this committee, thus ending his boycott of the National Unity Government.

Also in September, Syrian mediation settled a feud in the northern port of Tripoli between the pro-Syrian Arab Democratic Party (known as the 'Red Knights') and the anti-Syrian Tawheed Islami (the Islamic Unification Movement), enabling a security plan, drawn up in Damascus, to be implemented.

In Beirut, sporadic violence continued and, at the end of October, Walid Joumblatt (who was boycotting Cabinet meetings) and Nabih Berri threatened to resign from the Cabinet unless more progress was made on constitutional reform. A new security plan, effectively dictated by Syria, was introduced at the end of November. It was designed initially to put the whole of Beirut under the control of the Lebanese Army, and then to extend the Government's authority north to Tripoli, south to Israeli-occupied territory and east to the Chouf mountains, demonstrating to the Israelis the ability of the Lebanese Army to maintain security in the event of an Israeli withdrawal from the south of the country. Walid Joumblatt's Druze militia repeatedly objected to the eastward deployment, and obstructed the implementation of the plan. The army moved into Tripoli on 21 December, but a plan for the coastal areas to the north and south of Beirut was not agreed by all parties until 31 December. The army deployed along the coast road to southern Lebanon in mid-January 1985.

With the cost of keeping a force in southern Lebanon proving a drain on a drastically weakened economy, and with its per-personnel increasingly the target of attacks by Lebanese resistance groups, Israel's Government of National Unity, which was formed in September 1984, pledged itself to a withdrawal from Lebanon. Israel abandoned an unrealistic demand for a simultaneous withdrawal of Syrian forces from north-east Lebanon and, in November, entered into a series of talks at Naqoura, in southern Lebanon, with representatives of the Lebanese Government, who participated with Syrian approval. Israel's concern was that adequate security arrangements should be agreed, which would prevent the areas which it vacated from becoming bases for terrorist attacks on Israeli soldiers or territory, while the Lebanese Government wished to co-ordinate the withdrawal so as to prevent inter-communal fighting, such as occurred in the Chouf mountains in September 1983. The talks repeatedly foundered on the question of which forces should take the place of the Israeli Defence Force (IDF). The Lebanese, influenced by Syria, wanted the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) to police the border with Israel (as it had been mandated to do in 1978), and the Lebanese Army to deploy north of the Litani river, between UNIFIL and the Syrian Army. Israel did not consider the Lebanese Army to be a credible security force, and wanted UNIFIL to deploy north of the Litani while the southern Lebanese border was patrolled by the Israeli-backed SLA under Maj. Antoine Lahad, successor to the late Maj. Haddad, who died in December 1983. In the absence of any agreement, Israel withdrew from talks, and on 14 January 1985 the Israeli Cabinet voted to take unilateral steps towards a complete withdrawal, which was to be effected in three phases. The first phase involved the evacuation of the IDF from the western occupied sector, covering about 500 sq km around Sidon, to the Litani river area, around Nabatiyah, and was carried out in February 1985. Israel was prepared to test the competence of the Lebanese Army in handing over responsibility for security in the evacuated area to it, operating in tandem with UNIFIL. The Lebanese Government, however, rejected a peace-keeping role for the UN force, and the Lebanese Army moved into Sidon in mid-February.

By the middle of March, the civil strife which had been feared had not developed in the areas evacuated by the IDF, but the IDF had itself become the target of increasingly frequent attacks by Shi'ite guerrillas and was carrying out violent reprisals against the Shi'ite community. Shi'ite Muslim fundamentalists, opposed to the Government of President Gemayel, appeared to pose the greatest threat to the social stability of southern Lebanon.

In the second phase of the Israeli withdrawal, the IDF was to leave the occupied central and eastern sector, where it faces the Syrian Army in the Beka'a Valley, and redeploy around Hasbayyah. The third and final phase was planned to take the IDF behind Israel's northern border, leaving a buffer zone inside Lebanon of about 10 miles in depth, controlled by the SLA, with IDF backing.

Government

Under the 1926 Constitution, as subsequently amended, legislative power is normally held by the National Assembly (called the Chamber of Deputies until March 1979), with 99 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution), on the basis of proportional representation. The composition of the Government and the Assembly is determined by a 'national pact', formulated in 1943. Seats are allocated on a religious basis (53 Christian, 45 Muslim), according to the 6:5 ratio of Christians to Muslims recorded at the 1932 census. Executive power is vested in the President, elected for six years by the Assembly. He appoints a Prime Minister and other ministers to form a Cabinet, responsible to the Assembly.

Elections to the National Assembly were last held in May 1972. Subsequent elections have been postponed.

Defence

In July 1984 the Lebanese armed forces numbered 20,300 (army 19,000, navy 300, air force 1,000). There are, however, several private militias (numbering an estimated 21,000 men), and in 1985 there were also 8,000 Israeli troops, 40,000 Syrians, and several thousand Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon. UNIFIL forces numbered 5,690 in April 1984.

Economic Affairs

Lebanon has traditionally favoured private enterprise. Many people are employed in the provision of services (particularly trade and finance), with relatively few engaged in agriculture. The principal crops are cereals, olives and citrus fruits. Lebanon is a free market and about two-thirds of trade is transit traffic. Under the peaceful conditions which generally prevailed prior to 1975, Beirut was the principal commercial and financial centre of the Middle East. Political disturbances (see Recent History, above) have frequently crippled the economy, and pose a threat to Beirut's long-term role as a trading centre. During periods of civil unrest, many of the Beirut-based banks move elsewhere, and communications are disrupted. Lebanese institutions, however, have shown a remarkable resilience in the past. Even during the Israeli invasion in 1982, Lebanese banks did good business, registering a record inflow of deposits. During the civil war of 1975–76, up to US $1,000m. was entering the country from Arab and other backers of the various factions, a situation which persists in the current civil conflict.

The resilience of the Lebanese currency during the recent troubles is attributable to the absence of restrictions on withdrawals or foreign exchange transactions, to the inflow of foreign currency (referred to above), to the Central Bank's retention of 9.2m. troy oz of gold reserves (worth more than $3,000m. at 1984 market prices) and to remittances sent home by Lebanese workers abroad. Nevertheless, banking activity fell by 30% in the first half of 1983, and by February 1985 the Lebanese pound had fallen to its lowest level ever, with an exchange rate of £L15.20 per US dollar, having lost more than one-half of its value against the dollar in one year, despite the introduction of currency regulations, to restrict dealings in foreign exchange, and despite heavy buying of local currency by the Central Bank. Inflation was thought to be running at an annual rate of 50% or more in early 1985. Lebanon sought $500m. in aid from Saudi Arabia at the beginning of 1985, to support its currency and its rapidly falling foreign exchange reserves. These fell from $1,200m. to $620m. in 1984, and are thought to have fallen to between $350m. and $400m. by February 1985, a serious problem for a country which imports up to 80% of its goods. In January 1985 the Lebanese Government asked the IMF to send an advisory team to Beirut.

Quite apart from the disruption caused by the fighting in Lebanon (the Chouf war of autumn 1983 cost local industry an estimated £L10m. per day), the economy and, in turn, the banking system have suffered from the lack of confidence in the Government of President Amin Gemayel. Industrial production declined by about 40% in 1983, while exports fell by 48% in the first half of the year. About 90% of Lebanon's trade is with other Arab countries and the possibility existed of an unpopular Christian-led Lebanese Government coming under an Arab trade boycott. With more than three-quarters of the country in the hands of Syrian or Israeli forces, such domestic industry as was able to operate began to lose much of its own market: as the passage of home-produced goods into the occupied areas of the country became more unreliable, merchants in the south, for example, turned to a guaranteed source of supply in Israel. The Government was unable to collect taxes in the occupied areas. Import duties and airport and seaport charges, which had accounted for more than 45% of Government revenues, contributed less than 15% in 1983, as the militias set up their own illegal ports, charging attractive lower fees. In 1984, when the Government might have expected to earn some £L3,000m. in customs duty, income from this source was only about £L400m., nearly 65% less than in 1983. The Government successfully introduced measures to close illegal ports in October 1984. The army took control of some of these ports, and navy vessels patrolled the approaches to others, to keep commercial traffic away. Agriculture and tourism have been at a virtual standstill. In successive years, the Government has been forced to borrow heavily from the banks to offset a growing budget deficit. In 1983 this deficit was equivalent to about one-third of total budget expenditure, and in 1984 it rose to £L9,180m., or 84% of total projected expenditure. The depreciation of the Lebanese pound was partly blamed on the growing budget deficit and the Government's inability to deal with it. Lebanon's balance of payments, which was perennially in surplus until 1982, recorded deficits of US $930m. in 1983 and $1,400m. in 1984.

A draft austerity budget for 1985 was approved by the Cabinet at the end of 1984. It aims to increase overall expenditure by only 3%, and spending on public works, transport, housing and utilities is to be drastically reduced. Apart from the repayment of loans, defence is to have the largest single allocation (£L2,348m.), increasing by 20.5% compared with 1984. The protests of Muslim ministers succeeded in cutting $75m. from the original defence allocation, but the Government sees the creation of a credible national military force, to maintain security, as the key to political stability and subsequent economic reconstruction.

The task of reconstruction is a daunting one, even assuming that a political solution is conceived in the near future. The Council for Development and Reconstruction puts the cost of reconstruction at US $33,000m. over the next decade. Pledges of long-term funding have so far been limited, and Lebanon's Arab neighbours and trading partners may have been influenced to withhold aid by the Israelis' presence in the country and the apparent lack of progress on constitutional change in favour of the Muslim majority. At the Arab League summit meeting in Tunis in 1979, Arab states promised Lebanon $2,000m. in reconstruction aid, to be paid over five years, but only about $400m. had been received by the end of 1984. Libya and Algeria have declined to pay any of their share of the scheduled aid. The US Agency for International Development (USAID) withdrew its aid to Lebanon in February 1984, at about the same time as US Marines departed from Beirut, but appeared ready to resume aid in 1985.

Transport and Communications

There are more than 400 km (250 miles) of railway, and most of the main towns are connected by good roads. Beirut is a major port for the eastern Mediterranean. The port of Tripoli, in northern Lebanon, is the terminus of an oil pipeline from Iraq. Sidon is the terminus of the Trans-Arabian pipeline (Tapline) from Saudi Arabia, though the Lebanese branch of the pipeline was shut down at the end of 1983. Beirut is an important international air junction. Communications have been periodically disrupted by political disturbances, and the port and airport of Beirut have been temporarily closed on a number of occasions.

Social Welfare

A scale of compensation for loss of employment was introduced by the Government in 1963. Medical services are largely in private hands but there is a Social Security Fund which covers the medical expenses of workers. In 1970 Lebanon had 143 hospital establishments, with a total of 10,727 beds, and in 1979 there were 5,030 physicians working in the country. Under a national agreement, wages are paid by employers for up to 26 weeks during sickness.

Education

There are state-run primary and secondary schools, but private institutions provide the main facilities for secondary and higher education. State education is free. In 1980 the total enrolment at primary and secondary schools was equivalent to 83% of children between five and 17 years of age (86% of boys; 80% of girls). Lebanon has the highest literacy rate in the Arab world. In 1970 the rate of illiteracy among people aged 10 and over was 21.5% for males and 42.1% for females.

Tourism

Lebanon is normally a major tourist centre for the Middle East. Scenic beauty, ample sunshine and historical sites, notably Baalbek and Byblos, are the main attractions. Before the civil war, about 2m. tourists visited the country annually. In 1974 tourism contributed 20% of the country's income, but by 1978 the proportion was only 7.4%

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (May Day), 16 May (Ascension Day, Western Church), 20 June (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 15 August (Assumption), 27 August (Id ul Adha), 25 September (Ashoura), 1 November (All Saints' Day), 22 November (Independence Day), 25 November (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet), 25 December (Christmas Day), 31 December (Evacuation Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 9 February (Feast of St Maron), 22 March (Arab League Anniversary), 28–31 March (Easter, Western Church), 4–7 April (Easter, Eastern Church).

Directory

The Constitution

The Constitution was promulgated on 23 May 1926 and amended by the Constitutional Laws of 1927, 1929, 1943 and 1947.

According to the Constitution, the Republic of Lebanon is an independent and sovereign State, and no part of the territory may be alienated or ceded. Lebanon has no State religion. Arabic is the official language. Beirut is the capital.

All Lebanese are equal in the eyes of the law. Personal freedom and freedom of the Press are guaranteed and protected. The religious communities are entitled to maintain their own schools, provided they conform to the general requirements relating to public instruction as laid down by the State. Dwellings are inviolable; rights of ownership are protected by law. Every Lebanese citizen who has completed his twenty-first year is an elector and qualifies for the franchise.

LEGISLATIVE POWER

Legislative power is exercised by one house, the Chamber of Deputies, with 99 seats, 53 of which are allocated to Christians and 45 to Muslims (for full details of allocation, see Legislature below). Its members must be over 25 years of age, in possession of their full political and civil rights, and literate. They are considered representative of the whole nation, and are not bound to follow directives from their constituencies. They can be suspended only by a two-thirds majority of their fellow-members. Secret ballot was introduced in a new election law of April 1960.

The Chamber holds two sessions yearly, from the first Tuesday after 15 March to the end of May, and from the first Tuesday after 15 October to the end of the year. The normal term of the Chamber of Deputies is four years; general elections take place within sixty days before the end of this period. If the Chamber is dissolved before the end of its term, elections are held within three months of dissolution.

Voting in the Chamber is public—by acclamation, or by standing and sitting. A quorum of two-thirds and a majority vote is required for constitutional issues. The only exceptions to this occur when the Chamber becomes an electoral college, and chooses the President of the Republic, or Secretaries to the Chamber, or when the President is accused of treason or of violating the Constitution. In such cases voting is secret, and a two-thirds majority is needed.

EXECUTIVE POWER

The President of the Republic is elected for a term of six years, and is not immediately re-eligible. He and his ministers deal with the promulgation and execution of laws passed by the Chamber of Deputies. The Ministers and the Prime Minister are chosen by the President of the Republic. They are not necessarily members of the Chamber of Deputies, although they are responsible to it and have access to its debates. The President of the Republic must be a Maronite Christian and the Prime Minister a Sunni Muslim; and the choice of the other Ministers has to reflect the division between the communities in the Chamber.

The President himself can initiate laws. Alternatively, the President may demand an additional debate on laws already passed by the Chamber. He can adjourn the Chamber for up to a month, but not more than once in each session. In exceptional circumstances he can dissolve the Chamber and force an election. Ministers can be made to resign by a vote of no confidence.

Elections to the Chamber of Deputies, due in April 1976, were postponed for up to 26 months. In January 1978 the Chamber's term was further extended to June 1980. A further extension in April 1980 prolonged the life of the Chamber until June 1983.

In December 1976 the Chamber of Deputies gave the Government power to rule by decree for six months, subsequently extended until January 1978. In March 1979 the Chamber was renamed the National Assembly.

Legislature

MAJLIS ALNWAB

(National Assembly)

The electoral reform bill of April 1960 maintained the existing ratio of 6 Christians to 5 Muslims in the Chamber of Deputies. It is the custom for the President of the Chamber of Deputies to be a Shi'a Muslim. The Chamber was renamed the 'National Assembly' in March 1979.

There was a general election in May 1972, but the diversity of allegiance in the Chamber makes a strict analysis by party groupings impossible. The distribution of seats among religious groups is laid down by law. The elections due in April 1976 were postponed for up to 26 months and in January 1978 the term of the Chamber of Deputies was further extended until June 1980. In June 1984, after two further extensions, the term of the Chamber was extended until June 1986.

President: Hussain al-Hussaini.

Vice-President: Mounir Abu-Fadel.

Judicial System

Law and justice in the Lebanon are administered in accordance with the following codes, which are based upon modern theories of civil and criminal legislation:

(1) Code de la Propriété (1930).
(2) Code des Obligations et des Contrats (1932).
(3) Code de Procédure Civile (1933).
(4) Code Maritime (1947).
(6) Code de Procédure Pénale (Code Ottoman Modifié).
(7) Code Pénal (1943).
(8) Code Pénal Militaire (1946).
(9) Code d'Instruction Criminelle.

The following courts are now established:

(a) Fifty-six 'Single-Judge Courts', each consisting of a single judge, and dealing in the first instance with both civil and criminal cases; there are seventeen such courts at Beirut and seven at Tripoli.

(b) Eleven Courts of Appeal, each consisting of three judges, including a President and a Public Prosecutor, and dealing with civil and criminal cases; there are five such courts at Beirut.

(c) Four Courts of Cassation, three dealing with civil and commercial cases and the fourth with criminal cases. A Court of Cassation, to be properly constituted, must have at least three judges, one being the President and the other two Councillors. The First Court consists of the First President of the Court of Cassation, a President and two Councillors. The other two civil courts each consist of a President and three Councillors. If the Court of Cassation reverses the judgment of a lower court it does not refer the case back but retries it itself.

First President of the Court of Cassation: AMIN NASSAR.

President of the Court of the Council of State: YOUSSEF SAAVOLLAH EL-KHOURY.

(e) The Court of Justice, which is a special court consisting of a President and four judges, deals with matters affecting the security of the State.

In addition to the above, Islamic, Christian and Jewish religious courts deal with affairs of personal status (marriage, death, inheritance, etc.).

* The 1974 figures for members of the Roman Catholic churches are based on estimates by the curias of dioceses based in Lebanon. National and diocesan boundaries do not necessarily correspond.

According to the figures above, the largest single community in the Lebanon was formerly the Maronite Christians, a Uniate sect of the Roman Church. Estimates for 1983 put the sizes of the communities at: Shi'a Muslims 1.2m., Maronites 900,000, Sunni Muslims 750,000, Greek Orthodox 250,000, Druzes 250,000. The Maronites inhabited the old territory of Mount Lebanon, i.e. immediately east of Beirut. In the south, towards the Israeli frontier, Shi'a villages are most common, while between the Shi'a and the Maronites live the Druzes (divided between the Yazbakis and the Jumblatis). The Beka'a has many Greek Christians, while the Tripoli area is mainly Sunni Muslim. Altogether, of all the regions of the Middle East, Lebanon probably presents the closest juxtaposition of sects and peoples within a small territory. As Lebanese political life is organized on a sectarian basis, the Maronites also enjoy much political influence, including a predominant voice in the nomination of the President of the Republic.

The Press

The most important dailies are al-Anwar and an-Nahar, which have the highest circulations, The Daily Star, al-Jarida and L'Orient-Le Jour, the foremost French paper. The latter two are owned by Georges Naccashe, former Lebanese Ambassador to France, and tend to take a pro-government line. In a country where most of the élite speak French the other French daily, Le Soir, is also influential, and, for the same reason, the twice-weekly publication Le Commerce du Levant occupies an important place in the periodical press.

Political upheavals have hindered the operation of the Press, but even at the height of the 1975–76 civil war about two dozen newspapers and magazines appeared, reflecting every shade of political opinion. In January 1977, however, censorship was imposed on all publications. Some papers ceased publication, if only temporarily. Before this, Lebanon enjoyed the reputation of having one of the freest presses in the Middle East and was an important base for foreign correspondents. Some Lebanese papers have since introduced London and Paris editions.

BANKING

Beirut has for long been the leading financial and commercial centre in the Middle East, as can be seen from the extensive list of banking organizations given below. The civil disturbances between April 1975 and October 1976, followed by the Israeli invasion of 1982 and its after-effects, have considerably disrupted Beirut's banking and commercial facilities.

ROADS

Lebanon has 7,100 km of roads, of which 1,990 km are main roads. Most are generally good by Middle Eastern standards. The two international motorways are the north–south coastal road and the road connecting Beirut with Damascus in Syria. Among the major roads are that crossing the Beka'a and continuing south to Bent-Jbail and the Chtaura–Baalbek road. Hard-surfaced roads connect Jezzine with Moukhtara, Bzebdine with Metn, Meyroub with Afka and Tannourine. A Beirut–Tripoli Highway improvement scheme being carried out with help from the World Bank was due to be completed in 1983.

SHIPPING

Beirut is the principal port of call for the main shipping and forwarding business of the Levant; the port has frequently been closed by political disturbance. Tripoli, the northern Mediterranean terminus of the oil pipeline from Iraq (the other is Haifa), is also a busy port, with good equipment and facilities. Juniyah, north of Beirut, is Lebanon's third most important port. Saida is still relatively unimportant as a port. Shipping has frequently been disrupted by the events of recent years' and there were 11 militia-run ports operating illegally until November 1984, when they were either closed or taken over by the Lebanese Army. The four ports listed above are those legally operated by the Government.

LESOTHO

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Lesotho is a land-locked country, entirely surrounded by South African territory (including Transkei to the south-east). The climate is generally mild, although cooler in the highlands. Rainfall averages about 700 mm (28 inches) per year, mostly falling between October and April. The official languages are English and Sesotho. More than 80% of the population are Christians. The largest denominations are the Roman Catholic, Lesotho Evangelical and Anglican Churches. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) is blue, with two narrow vertical stripes, of green and red, at the hoist, and a representation of a Basotho hat, in white, at the centre of the blue area. The capital is Maseru.

Recent History

Lesotho was formerly Basutoland, a dependency of the United Kingdom. In 1868, at the request of the Basotho people's chief, the territory became a British protectorate. Basutoland was annexed to Cape Colony (now part of South Africa) in 1871 but detached in 1884. It became a separate British colony and was administered as one of the High Commission Territories in southern Africa, the others being the protectorates of Bechuanaland (now Botswana) and Swaziland. In 1903 the Basutoland Council was established as a consultative body. The British Act of Parliament which established the Union of South Africa in 1910 also provided for the possible inclusion in South Africa of the three High Commission Territories. The United Kingdom, however, guaranteed that any such change in status would not be made without consulting the local inhabitants. Until 1960, successive South African governments asked for the transfer of the three territories, but the native chiefs always objected to such a scheme.

Within Basutoland, gradual progress was made towards self-government, and in 1955 the Basutoland Council asked to be granted power to legislate in internal matters. A revised constitution, introduced in 1956, established the colony's first Legislative Council. A new constitution, granting limited powers of self-government, was adopted in September 1959. Basutoland's first general election, held on the basis of universal adult suffrage, took place on 29 April 1965, and full internal self-government was achieved on the following day. Moshoeshoe II, Paramount Chief since 1960, was recognized as King. Of the 60 seats in the new Legislative Assembly, 31 were won by the Basutoland National Party (BNP), a conservative group supporting limited co-operation with South Africa. The BNP's leader, Chief Leabua Jonathan, failed to win a seat but won a by-election in July 1965, when he became Prime Minister. Following a constitutional conference in June 1966, Basutoland became independent, as Lesotho, on 4 October 1966.

The BNP, restyled the Basotho National Party at independence, has remained in power. A constitutional crisis arose in December 1966, when King Moshoeshoe attempted to obtain wider personal powers. In January 1967, however, the King signed an undertaking, on pain of compulsory abdication, to abide by the constitution, which gave effective executive power to the Prime Minister. A general election was held in January 1970, when the opposition Basotho Congress Party (BCP), a pan-Africanist group, appeared to have won a majority of seats in the National Assembly. However, Chief Jonathan, the Prime Minister, declared a state of emergency, suspended the constitution and arrested Ntsu Mokhehle and other leaders of the BCP. The election was annulled, and the Assembly prorogued. King Moshoeshoe II was placed under house arrest and later exiled, though he returned in December 1970 after accepting a government order which banned him from participating in politics. Since January 1970 the country has been effectively under the Prime Minister's personal control. No subsequent elections have been held but an interim National Assembly of 93 members, comprising the former Senate (mainly Chiefs) and 60 members nominated by the Cabinet, was inaugurated in April 1973. The state of emergency was lifted in July. Following an attempted coup in January 1974 against his increasingly unpopular one-man rule, Chief Jonathan introduced strict new security laws.

In 1974 Chief Jonathan accepted proposals to draft a new constitution which would retain the constitutional monarchy, but he has continued to rule by means of the interim Assembly, dominated by the BNP. In 1975 the BCP split into two factions, internal and external. Chief Jonathan sought to draw support away from the external wing, which is backed by the Lesotho Liberation Army (LLA), by announcing amnesties for political exiles in September 1980 and May 1981.

The LLA launched a series of bomb attacks in Lesotho during 1981, and violence continued in 1982 with the murders of Koenyama Chakela, Secretary-General of the internal wing of the BCP, and Jobo Rampeta, the Minister of Works. The South African Government has consistently denied allegations that it supports the LLA, but points out that Lesotho allows its territory to be used by guerrilla fighters of the African National Congress (ANC), a banned opposition group in South Africa. In December 1982 South African forces made a major assault on the homes of ANC members in Maseru, killing more than 40 people, including several innocent civilians.

In March 1983 Chief Jonathan announced that elections would be held, and these were provided for in the 1983 Parliament Bill, presented to the National Assembly in May. The bill set no date for the elections but repealed the emergency order of 1970 which suspended the constitution (see Government). Financial provision for the elections was made in December 1983 and February 1984, and in April a new electoral law was introduced. In November the Government announced that elections would be held in early 1985, and in December 1984 the King ordered the dissolution of the National Assembly, with effect from January 1985, and appointed a judicial commission to review the boundaries of the electoral constituencies. Chief Jonathan promised that all individuals and political parties would be allowed to contest the elections, although it remained uncertain whether Ntsu Mokhehle would be permitted to return from exile to participate in the election campaign. During 1984 opposition to the BNP appeared to be increasing: in addition to the formation of the Basotho Democratic Alliance (see below), another new political party, the National Independence Party, was formed in December 1984, and was expected to contest the elections.

Lesotho is economically dependent on South Africa, but rejects the South African Government's policy of apartheid and does not recognize South Africa's grant of 'independence' to the Transkei 'homeland'. The consequent effective closure of Lesotho's border with Transkei has been especially damaging, making communication between Maseru and the quarter of the population who live in the south-west of the country difficult. Relations between Lesotho and South Africa were seriously damaged by the South African assault of 1982, and continued to deteriorate during 1983, partly as a result of repeated attacks on Lesotho, supposedly by the LLA. In August a car-bomb exploded in Maseru in what was believed to be an assassination attempt against Chief Jonathan. Tension was heightened in May by two bomb explosions in South Africa, for one of which the ANC claimed responsibility, and also by Jonathan's tour of North Korea, the People's Republic of China and Eastern European countries.

During 1983 South Africa periodically tightened its border controls on the main frontier with Lesotho, which caused food shortages in the Kingdom, and in August South Africa delivered an ultimatum to Lesotho, either to expel (or repatriate) 3,000 South African refugees or to face the economic consequences. Two groups of refugees left Lesotho, reportedly voluntarily, after the ultimatum. However, relations with South Africa did not improve during the greater part of 1984. In March Lesotho alleged that, at a meeting with a group of Basotho political dissidents in Pretoria in January, the South African Minister of Foreign Affairs had encouraged the dissidents to form a new opposition party, the Basotho Democratic Alliance (BDA), and that South Africa had plotted with the BDA to overthrow the Lesotho Government. In April the BDA was officially registered as a political party, and its Chairman, Phoka Chaolane, reportedly confirmed that South Africa had promised to provide financial support to the BDA for the forthcoming election campaign. The BDA's stated policies include the severance of diplomatic relations with Eastern bloc countries and the banning of communism in Lesotho. The party's President is Charles Molapo, who resigned his post in the Lesotho Cabinet in 1983 in protest at Lesotho's establishment of diplomatic links with socialist countries. Both he and Chaolane were expelled from the National Assembly in July 1984.

Lesotho's relations with South Africa were further marred by Pretoria's attempts to pressurize Lesotho into signing a joint non-aggression pact, similar to the Nkomati Accord of March 1984 (see Mozambique). Lesotho's continued refusal to sign such a pact led South Africa to impound consignments of armaments destined for Lesotho, and to threaten further economic sanctions in August, including the suspension of the Highlands water scheme. However, after talks between the two countries in September 1984, and an announcement by Lesotho that the ANC had agreed to withdraw completely from Lesotho, relations improved slightly in October, when South Africa released the arms that it had been impounding and resumed talks on the Highlands scheme.

Since the mid-1970s Lesotho has pursued a more open foreign policy, including stronger links with socialist countries, and has reduced its previous close ties with South Africa. In 1983 Lesotho established full diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China, North Korea, Nicaragua and the USSR. Diplomatic links with Taiwan and South Korea were severed. Yugoslavia and Romania were also expected to establish embassies in Maseru in 1984. Plans to reduce the country's dependence on South Africa include a new international airport and participation in the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (see p. 205), of which Lesotho is a member.

Government

Lesotho is an hereditary monarchy. The King is Head of State but has no political power. In January 1970 the Prime Minister declared a state of emergency, dissolved Parliament and suspended the constitution. The Cabinet, formerly responsible to Parliament, assumed full power. A National Assembly of 93 members, comprising the former Senate (22 Chiefs and 11 Senators nominated by the King) and 60 members nominated by the Cabinet, was inaugurated in 1973. There is also a College of Chiefs, which has the power, under traditional law, to depose the King by a majority vote. Elections were expected to take place in early 1985: these were provided for in the 1983 Parliament Bill, presented to the National Assembly in May. The bill repealed the 1970 emergency order, which suspended the constitution, and is intended to act as Lesotho's constitution as soon as it becomes law. It provides for a National Assembly of 60 elected members and not more than 20 nominated members, a separate Senate comprising 22 Chiefs and eight other senators appointed by the King, and a Prime Minister at the head of the executive branch of government. Lesotho comprises ten administrative districts, each under an appointed District Co-ordinator.

Defence

The small, but expanding, Lesotho Paramilitary Force is drawn from government supporters, and numbered 1,500 in 1980. In 1979 Chief Jonathan announced a plan to convert the Lesotho Paramilitary Force into a national army to cope with the deteriorating security situation. The planned defence expenditure in the 1983/84 budget was M24.9m.

Economic Affairs

The economy is primarily agricultural, with about 30% of the gross domestic product (GDP) and 83% of employment provided by agriculture. The principal crop is maize, though substantial amounts of wheat, sorghum, peas and beans are also grown. Yields are low and variable, and in 1983 more than 40% of Lesotho's food requirements were imported, principally from South Africa. Severe drought between 1982 and 1984 seriously affected crop yields. In 1983 about 80% of grain crops, and all vegetable crops, failed, and in March a state of national food emergency was declared. This continued during 1984, and the Government anticipated that a large proportion of the population would need food aid until mid-1985. The total cereal import requirements for 1984/85 were expected to be about 200,000 tons, compared with 180,000 tons (already representing an increase of nearly 40% on the normal requirement) in 1983/84. None the less, food self-sufficiency is considered to be attainable, and a self-sufficiency programme is under way. The programme received an allocation of M11m. from the 1984/85 development budget. The major livestock products are wool and mohair, which are marketed for export. The national herd comprised about 540,000 cattle, 1.3m. sheep and 870,000 goats in 1982, but the drought had reduced the cattle herd by about 25% by early 1984. There is an acute shortage of productive land in Lesotho. The country also suffers from severe soil erosion, owing to overgrazing, and there is a great need for afforestation. Development is hampered by a complicated and archaic system of land tenure and is concentrated on five large rural schemes, largely financed from abroad. The planned five-year Basic Agricultural Services Programme is intended to improve farming practices and to raise the level of farm incomes throughout the country. In 1982 it was announced that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) would inject more than US $17m. into Lesotho in the third UNDP Country Programme for the period 1982–86. This programme corresponds with Lesotho's third five-year development programme for 1981–85, and in both programmes the main emphasis is on agriculture, with a view to increasing food production and to generating gainful rural employment. The Lesotho Agricultural Development Bank (LADB), established in 1980, planned to invest $15.2m. in agricultural projects during the period 1984–86.

Water is an important resource, and the Highlands scheme, due to commence construction in 1988, includes plans for the export of water to South Africa, in addition to hydroelectricity production, and has the potential to become a major source of government revenue. The contract for the first phase of the scheme's feasibility study was awarded in July 1983, and this phase was completed in early 1984. The results showed that the project was viable, and that its potential was considerably greater than had been originally envisaged. This necessitated a revision of the scope of the feasibility study, which, combined with the deterioration of relations between South Africa and Lesotho during 1984, delayed the progress of the second and final phase of the study, which was not resumed until October 1984, with completion expected in March 1986. Once in operation, it is estimated that the scheme could have a generating capacity of more than 100 MW of electricity for Lesotho, which at present relies on South Africa for its power supply.

The Letseng-la-Terai diamond mine, owned 75% by De Beers and 25% by the Government, began production in 1977 but was closed down in 1982, when it ceased to be economically viable because of world recession in the diamond market. Total production increased from 15,000 carats in 1977 to 105,000 carats in 1980, but declined to 52,000 carats, worth M17.9m., in 1981. Diamonds had been providing more than one-half of Lesotho's export earnings, and the closure of Letseng-la-Terai has increased the country's economic dependence on South Africa. However, plans to reopen the mine were being considered in 1984. The Romanian Government has expressed interest in developing potential uranium deposits in the Teyateyaneng region of Lesotho.

Manufacturing contributed only 4% of Lesotho's GDP in 1979, and in recent years this share has increased only slightly, to about 6%. However, with the advantages of proximity and duty-free access to the South African market and plentiful labour, the sector has the potential for expansion. The Lesotho National Development Corporation (LNDC), supplemented in 1977 by the Basotho Enterprise Development Corporation, has attracted some industry to Lesotho, especially tourism. By encouraging the growth of industry, the LNDC aims to create employment opportunities. It created some 2,650 jobs in 1981–82, and in 1983 it aimed to create about 2,000 jobs. The LNDC was allocated M2.5m. from the 1984/85 capital budget.

However, the economy of Lesotho is overwhelmingly dependent upon South Africa, especially for employment. Up to 20,000 new jobs are needed each year. There were about 140,000 Basotho men (representing about one-half of the adult male labour force) working in South African mines in 1984. Their remittances constituted about 40% of Lesotho's gross national product. Although there was a slight increase in the number of Basotho men recruited for this work in the South African mines in 1984, this source of employment seems likely to be reduced in future as a result of South Africa's recruitment of mine-workers from the 'Homelands' or 'Bantustans'.

Lesotho, with Botswana and Swaziland, forms part of the customs and monetary area of South Africa, although it became responsible for its own monetary policy and financial institutions in 1974, and introduced its own currency, the loti (plural: maloti), in 1980. Its share of customs receipts provided 64% of current revenue in 1981/82, 55% in 1982/83 and 66% in 1983/84; it was expected to provide M151m., equivalent to about 66% of current revenue, in 1984/85. In addition, the Lesotho Bank is entitled to hold 60% of Basotho mine workers' wages by way of deferred payments, and these rose from R43m. in 1974 to an estimated R101m. in 1977, but fell to R88m. in 1978. Total expenditure for 1984/85 was expected to be M314.6m., a 3.3% increase over the previous year. The budget deficit grew from virtually nil in 1979/80 to an anticipated M38.8m., before borrowing, in 1983/84, but this was expected to be reduced by some 93%, to M2.5m., in 1984/85. Lesotho regularly has a massive trade deficit, although it is partly offset by the inflow of foreign exchange from the earnings of migrant workers and from aid payments. The trade deficit stood at US $478m. in 1983, and in that year it was agreed that Lesotho should receive aid totalling 714,000 ECU from the European Development Fund (EDF) for a trade and tourism promotion programme, aimed at improving Lesotho's balance of trade by increasing its export earnings.

Lesotho's second five-year plan, for 1976–80, exceeded its expenditure target of M112m., concentrating on agricultural and rural development. The third five-year plan, for 1981–85, aimed to increase national economic independence and to provide new opportunities for industry and employment through long-term investments of M700m. However, domestic wage employment was expected to increase by only 11,000 jobs, while the labour force was expected to grow by 92,000. In 1982 a marginal growth of GDP in real terms was recorded, compared with a decrease of 2% in 1981.

Transport and Communications

The only railway is a segment, about 1.5 km (1 mile) long, of South African Railway line at Maseru. The main road linking Butha-Buthe to Quthing is 304 km (189 miles), of which 144 km (89 miles), from Leribe to Tsoaing, are tarred. In December 1984 the EDF signed an agreement for a loan of M11.5m. to finance the first stage of a new road, intended eventually to run from Mohale's Hoek to Quthing. Construction work on the first stage was expected to begin in early 1985, and finance for the final stage is expected to be made available under the next EDF allocation, in 1986. In 1983 the main road network was 2,803 km (1,742 miles), and there were a further 1,000 km (620 miles) of earth roads. The road system has been expanded to deal with problems caused by closure of the Transkei border, and in May 1984 the International Development Association approved a loan of $15.2m. towards financing a major road improvement project, involving the rehabilitation of 88 km of rural roads, and extensive regravelling of the road network. The total cost of the project, which is due to be completed in 1987, is estimated at $30m., and the ADB is to provide further financing. There are international air links through Leabua Jonathan Airport, at Maseru, and 32 airstrips throughout the country. The only external air links are with South Africa, Mozambique, Swaziland and Botswana. In 1983 South African Airways announced that its service to Lesotho would be suspended from April because it was uneconomic. Construction of a new international airport at Thota-Moli, about 20 km from Maseru, began in 1983, and the airport project was allocated M27m. in the 1984/85 development budget. Construction of the airport, estimated to cost $40m.–$47m., was expected to be completed on schedule by June 1985. The airport will be able to accommodate jet aircraft, and is likely to be an important factor in reducing Lesotho's economic dependence on South Africa. Lesotho's present airport is capable of taking only small aircraft from neighbouring countries.

Social Welfare

The Government runs 11 hospitals, including a mental hospital and a leper settlement, and 30 of the 102 rural clinics. There were plans to build 35 more clinics by 1985. In addition, there are eight mission hospitals. In 1980 the country had 2,224 hospital beds and 82 physicians. The service is hampered by the location of most clinics in lowland areas, whereas most of the population is based in the mountainous areas. Health education is being extended to all sections of the population. In 1984 the African Development Fund (ADF) agreed to provide a loan of $7.4m. to finance a rural health service project which includes plans for the construction of eight district hospitals.

Education

All primary education is free, and is largely in the hands of the three main Christian missions (Lesotho Evangelical, Roman Catholic and Anglican) under the direction of the Ministry of Education. In 1979 the adult literacy rate of 50% was one of the highest in Africa, and an estimated 67% of children between six and 12 years of age (54% of boys; 81% of girls) attended primary schools. Only 12% of those aged 12 to 17 (9% of boys; 16% of girls) were enrolled at secondary schools. In 1982 there were 277,945 primary and 27,799 secondary pupils. In 1975 the Roma Campus, near Maseru, of the University of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland was nationalized to form the National University of Lesotho, which had 1,143 students in 1983. In 1984 the International Development Association (IDA) agreed a $9.8m. credit to help finance a $13m. five-year project for educational development. The project aims to improve teaching standards by providing in-service training for about 600 primary and 85 vocational school teachers.

Tourism

Lesotho's scenic beauty, including a spectacular national park at Sehlabathebe, offers great opportunities for tourism, and the industry is being steadily developed. Luxury hotels have been built, principally with South African backing, and there are plans for a ski resort in the Maluti mountains and for a second national park on the Qeme plateau. There were an estimated 150,000 tourist arrivals in 1980, mostly from South Africa. In 1983 the EDF agreed to give aid for a trade and tourism promotion programme in Lesotho.

The Constitution

The Constitution of the Kingdom of Lesotho, which took effect at independence on 4 October 1966, was suspended in January 1970. A Commission to propose a new system of government was set up in November 1974. The 1966 Constitution is summarized below:

The King is Head of State and constitutional monarch. The executive body is the Cabinet, consisting of the Prime Minister and not fewer than seven other Ministers. Parliament is bicameral. The Senate contains the 22 principal chiefs and 11 other persons nominated by the King. The National Assembly has 60 members, elected by universal adult suffrage in 60 single-member constituencies. The Prime Minister must be able to command majority support in the National Assembly. If challenged, the government must establish in the courts that, where there are several ways of achieving its objective, the means least restrictive of civil liberties have been chosen.

A bill presented to the interim National Assembly (created in 1973) on 18 May 1983 repealed the order suspending the Constitution. The bill, known as the 1983 Parliament Bill, is intended to act as the new constitution when it becomes law, and provides for a National Assembly of 60 elected members and not more than 20 nominated members, a separate Senate of 22 Chiefs and eight other senators appointed by the King, and a Prime Minister at the head of the executive branch of government.

Legislature

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The 1966 Constitution provided for a National Assembly and a Senate. The Assembly elections of January 1970 were annulled by the Prime Minister, who suspended the Constitution. No further elections have been held but an interim Assembly of 93 members (the former Senate and 60 nominated members) was inaugurated on 27 April 1973. Seven members of the Basotho Congress Party (including its leader), who were nominated as members, boycotted the Assembly, and replacements have since been nominated. An electoral law was introduced in April 1984, and in December the King ordered the dissolution of the National Assembly with effect from 1 January 1985, preparatory to general elections, due to be held in early 1985 at an unspecified date.

Speaker: J. T. Kolane.

RAILWAYS

The territory is linked with the railway system of the Republic of South Africa by a short line from Maseru to Marseilles on the Bloemfontein/Natal main line.

ROADS

The main road network is 2,803 km in length, connecting Maseru, regional headquarters, district towns, major centres and places of interest. Some roads have been bituminized, including a stretch of more than 400 km of the road connecting Maseru with Khamane in the north, Mohale's Hoek in the south and Molimo Nthuse and Roma in the eastern central region; and roads providing access to the border with South Africa. A road is being extended from Mohale's Hoek to Qacha's Nek in the south and parts of it are being improved to an all-weather bituminized/gravel surface. Other roads have also been improved. The principal network comprises 417 km of bituminized roads, 1,799 km of gravel roads, and 587 km of earth roads. In addition to this network, there are more than 1,000 km of unimproved earth roads and tracks, most of which are being maintained and developed under self-help campaigns and with the assistance of the UN. The government has given top priority to road construction, which was allocated M33m. in the 1984/85 budget. There are about 2,560 km of bridle paths.

CIVIL AVIATION

There are 32 air strips in Lesotho, 14 of which receive charter and regular scheduled air services operated by Lesotho Airways Corporation, providing transport for tourists and facilitating government communications and mail services between Maseru and all the main centres in the interior of the country. Lesotho Airways Corporation also operates scheduled international flights to Johannesburg, Maputo (Mozambique) and Manzini (Swaziland). In 1983 there was some speculation as to whether flights between Lesotho and South Africa would continue, since both countries find them uneconomic. A new international airport at Maseru, with jet capacity, was due for completion in mid-1985.

LIBERIA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Liberia lies on the west coast of Africa, with Sierra Leone and Guinea to the north, and the Ivory Coast to the east. The climate is tropical, with temperatures ranging from 18°C (65°F) to 49°C (120°F). English is the official language but the 16 major ethnic groups speak their own languages and dialects. Liberia is officially a Christian state, though some Liberians hold traditional beliefs. There are about 100,000 Muslims. The national flag (proportions 19 by 10) has 11 horizontal stripes, alternately of red and white, with a navy blue square canton, containing a five-pointed white star, in the upper hoist. The capital is Monrovia.

Recent History

Founded by liberated black slaves from the southern USA, Liberia became an independent republic in 1847. President William Tubman, in office since 1944, died in July 1971 and was succeeded by his Vice-President, William R. Tolbert, who was re-elected in October 1975. While continuing to pursue the 'open door' economic and foreign policies of his predecessor, President Tolbert encouraged national development along the lines of 'Liberianization' and self-sufficiency. The True Whig Party's monopoly of power met with increasing criticism, and in May 1978 the main opposition group, the Progressive Alliance of Liberia (PAL), held its first conference. Liberia's reputation for political stability was shaken in April 1979, when a government proposal to increase the price of rice was followed by riots, bloodshed and looting. President Tolbert assumed emergency powers and postponed the forthcoming municipal elections.

In April 1980 President Tolbert was assassinated in a military coup led by Master Sergeant (later Commander-in-Chief) Samuel Doe, who took over power as Chairman of a People's Redemption Council (PRC), suspending the Constitution and banning all political parties. The new regime was severely criticized for its summary execution of 13 former senior government officials who had been accused of corruption and mismanagement. Foreign relations improved in mid-1981, when a commission was appointed to draft a new Constitution. It was announced that Liberia would return to civilian rule, after the document was completed, by January 1986. In July 1981, however, all civilian ministers received commissions, thus installing total military rule.

During 1981 and 1982 there were frequent dismissals and resignations from the PRC and the Cabinet, as Doe showed his determination to stamp out corruption and abuse of public office. In August 1981 five members of the PRC itself were executed for plotting against Doe and the more moderate members of his Government; the Minister of Justice was dismissed in July 1982 in a police corruption scandal; and several ministers and heads of public companies were replaced in October and November after accusations of malpractices. There were further dismissals in 1983, the most important being that of Brig.-Gen. Thomas Quiwonkpa, the commanding general of the armed forces. In November he was implicated in a planned military coup, along with 12 other leading officers. The Soviet ambassador and the Ghanaian chargé d'affaires were expelled from the country, accused of having indulged in activities incompatible with their diplomatic status, following rumours that a foreign embassy had been aware of the plot and had promised money and arms.

The draft Constitution was finally completed and approved by the PRC in March 1983. It was submitted to a national referendum in July 1984, at which it was approved by 78.3% of registered voters and was therefore adopted. In the same month, President Doe dissolved the PRC and replaced it with the Interim National Assembly. The Assembly's 58 members were selected by Doe, and consisted of 36 civilians and all the members of the former PRC. The civilian members were ostensibly to represent the country's various political views, but most of them were former stalwarts of the True Whig Party. The ban on political organizations was lifted in July 1984, to enable parties to organize and register with the Election Commission, prior to the presidential and legislative elections, which were due to take place in October and November 1985. By January 1985 some 10 parties were in existence, but not all of them had registered, as a financial qualification of $150,000 was proving prohibitive for the smaller parties. In August 1984 Doe founded the National Democratic Party of Liberia (NDPL) and formally announced his intention of standing as a presidential candidate. An alleged coup plot was uncovered in August 1984 and several prominent political figures were arrested and accused of complicity. Among those arrested were Maj.-Gen. Nicholas Podier, then Speaker of the Interim National Assembly; Justice Isaac Nyenplu, a member of the Election Commission; and Dr Amos Sawyer, a professor at the University of Liberia and leader of the Liberia People's Party. Dr Sawyer's arrest provoked vociferous student protests; in retaliation, Doe dismissed the entire university staff and sent troops on to the campus to evict protesting students. In the ensuing clashes between students and troops, at least five students were reported to have been killed, and more than 100 were injured. Although Dr Sawyer was later released, several other prominent politicians have subsequently been detained, leading critics to conclude that Doe is attempting to prevent potential rivals from participating in the electoral process.

In August 1983 Liberia re-established diplomatic relations with Israel. C-in-C Doe made a state visit to Israel—the first by an African leader since the Black African states severed ties with Israel after the 1973 Middle East war. A co-operation agreement was signed between the two countries, under which Israel was to supply Liberia with financial and technical assistance.

Government

Following the military coup in April 1980, Liberia was placed under martial law, and was governed by the People's Redemption Council (PRC), which had full legislative and executive powers. In July 1984 the PRC was dissolved and its functions assumed by the Interim National Assembly, which has 58 members, consisting of the former members of the PRC along with 36 civilian representatives. Members of the Assembly are selected by the Head of State, who is also President of the Assembly. Liberia is preparing for a return to civilian rule in January 1986: a new constitution was approved by referendum in July 1984, and presidential and legislative elections were due to take place in October and November 1985.

Defence

In July 1984 the armed forces of Liberia consisted of an army of 4,900, a navy of 450, an air force of 250 and a paramilitary force of 1,750 men. Defence expenditure was estimated at $27.2m. in 1982. Military service commences at 16 years of age.

Economic Affairs

The economy is predominantly agricultural, with about 70% of the working population engaged in farming. Much of Liberia's agriculture is at subsistence level, but rubber-growing, mainly on large plantations owned by foreign companies, employs more than 50% of the wage-earning population. Rubber production totalled 77,000 metric tons in 1981, but fell to an estimated 70,000 tons in 1982. In 1983 rubber exports (chiefly to the USA, which takes 75% of Liberia's rubber) provided 15% of total export earnings, while rubber contributed 6% of GDP. Other major cash crops are coffee and cocoa, while production of palm oil for export is also being encouraged. Liberia's principal food crops are rice and cassava. Timber resources are vast, and sawn timber provided 6.1% of total export earnings in 1981.

Liberia is the second largest African producer of iron ore, which, like rubber, is exploited mainly by foreign investors. Shipments of iron ore provide about 70% of total export earnings. The Liberian-American-Swedish Minerals Company constructed Africa's first pelletizing plant at Buchanan, while a new port and railway link the plant with the mines at Nimba. Concessions for offshore petroleum exploration were offered in 1982. Diamonds form another important source of export earnings.

Foreign investment in Liberia has been vast, although it declined drastically after the 1980 coup. Liberia has the largest merchant fleet in the world (with an aggregate displacement of 81.5m. grt in 1982), and the country's 'open registry' system generates annual revenue of about $12m. Liberia's second Development Plan, covering the period 1981–85, aimed at increasing incomes and production in the rural sector by improving the infrastructure and establishing producer co-operatives. One of the Plan's targets was self-sufficiency in rice by 1985. The Government has set up an industrial free zone in Monrovia, the capital, in an attempt to develop the small manufacturing sector of the economy, and to reduce the 20% unemployment rate.

The Liberian economy relies heavily on financial aid from the USA. Economic and military aid from the USA totalled $77m. in 1984, and was expected to rise to $91m. in 1985. On a per caput basis, this is the highest amount that the USA sends to any Black African state. Liberia's currency is at par with the US dollar. Rising world prices for petroleum, and the fall in demand for iron ore and rubber, contributed to a foreign debt of $641.2m. in 1984. GDP fell in real terms between 1980 and 1982, but grew by 1% in 1983/84 and was expected to grow by 4% in 1984/85. The IMF announced a loan of $88.7m. in 1982, to compensate for the drop in export revenue, and a $57m. stand-by agreement in September 1983. Liberia also appealed for $975m. in loans and grants at a UN-sponsored donor conference in October 1983. The money was to be used to support the economy over the following three years. The 1984/85 budget introduced a wages and employment package, aimed at reducing the public sector wage bill from $123m. in 1983/84 to $115m. in 1984/85. Some 2,400 civil servants were to be voluntarily retired, and a monthly health tax of $5 and a deduction of $10 were to be levied on all public sector wages, bringing in $7.8m. in extra revenue annually. Total domestic revenue was estimated at $314.8m., and a budget deficit of $52.6m. was predicted. Servicing of the foreign debt was to take $113m., or 26% of total planned expenditure.

In August 1983 the Government abolished the monopoly of the Liberian Petroleum Refining Company (LPRC) on petroleum products and set up a free market for the import of petroleum, with the LPRC acting as a 'clearing house' for potential importers. It also announced the planned sale of the Electricity and Timber Corporations to private investors.

Liberia professes a non-aligned stance, and foreign aid comes from the World Bank, the EEC, the African Development Bank and Arab development funds, while the principal individual donors are the USA, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom. The Mano River Union, formed in 1973, provides for close economic co-operation between Liberia, Sierra Leone and Guinea, with the three countries forming a single customs union. Studies for a major joint hydroelectric scheme were completed in 1981. Liberia is also a member of ECOWAS (see p. 134) and the OAU (p. 188).

Transport and Communications

There are 490 km (304 miles) of railways, which are privately owned, and 5,412 km (3,382 miles) of private and public roads. About $92.2m. was to be invested in road construction and development under the 1981–85 Development Plan. Work started in October 1984 on a 220-km road between Monrovia and Freetown, which will eventually form part of the Nouakchott-to-Lagos highway. The Monrovia-to-Freetown section is being constructed under the aegis of the Mano River Union, and is to cost some $145m. There are four ports, including the deep-water berths at Monrovia. A large number of vessels, based in many countries, are registered as belonging to the Liberian merchant fleet, which is the largest in the world. Air Liberia and foreign lines operate internal and international air services.

Social Welfare

Basic health services are limited, and there is no adequate state welfare system. A National Social Security and Welfare Corporation was established in 1976 to administer pensions, sickness benefit and welfare funds, and preparations for a national social insurance scheme began in 1977. In 1980 there were 161 physicians, 310 clinics, 35 hospitals and 30 health centres. There is free care of children who are less than two years of age.

Education

Primary and secondary education are free, and the Government provides a 50% subsidy for university education. Enrolment at primary schools in 1980 was equivalent to 66% of children between six and 11 years of age (82% of boys; 50% of girls). Secondary enrolment in 1980 was equivalent to 20% of those aged 12 to 17. In 1981 there were 303,168 pupils enrolled in 1,635 schools. There is a university in Monrovia, which had 3,216 students in 1982. Other higher education institutes are the Cuttington University College, controlled by the Episcopal Church, and a College of Science and Technology, opened in 1978. A Community Schools programme operates rural schools as community centres where adult literacy is taught, and there were 110 such centres in operation in 1979. A 12-year National Educational Plan was launched in 1978, and a literacy campaign announced in 1981. In spite of the increased part played by education in national development, an estimated 69.5% of the adult population remained illiterate in 1980.

Tourism

Tourism is slowly being developed, though communications outside Monrovia are poor. This is a major hindrance to expansion, as is the scarcity of funds for tourist facilities. There were 6,000 tourists in 1976.

Public Holidays

1985: 14 May (National Unification Day), 26 July (Independence Day), 24 August (National Flag Day), 25 December (Christmas Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 7 January (Pioneer's Day), 11 February (Armed Forces Day), 11 March (Decoration Day), 15 March (J. J. Robert's Birthday), 10 April (Fast and Prayer Day), 12 April (National Redemption Day, anniversary of the 1980 coup).

The Constitution

On 25 April 1980 martial law was declared and the Constitution was suspended 'until further notice'. All legislative and executive powers were vested in the People's Redemption Council (PRC). In April 1981 it was announced that a new constitution was being drafted and this draft was finally published and approved by the PRC in March 1983. It contains provisions for the division of the government into three independent branches: the executive, the legislature and the judiciary. The executive powers of the republic are to be vested in the President, who shall be Head of State, Head of Government and Commander-in-Chief of the Liberian armed forces, and who must be elected by universal adult suffrage for a six-year term. The Constitution makes provisions for a multi-party system of government, and incorporates powers to prevent the declaration of a one-party state, the dissolution of the legislative or the suspension of the judiciary. The draft constitution was submitted to a national referendum on 3 July 1984 and was approved by 78.3% of registered voters. Presidential and legislative elections were due to take place in October and November 1985, followed by the return to civilian rule in January 1986.

Legislature

INTERIM NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The Interim National Assembly was created in July 1984 to replace the People's Redemption Council (PRC), which had governed since the 1980 coup. The Assembly has 58 members, consisting of all the members of the former PRC, together with 36 civilian members to represent the various political views, chosen on the basis of population. Members are selected by the Head of State. The function of the Assembly is to help to implement the return to civilian rule, which is due to be completed by January 1986.

President: C-in-C Samuel K. Doe.
Vice-President: Dr Harry F. Moniba.

Political Organizations

All political organizations were banned after the coup in April 1980. However, in July 1984 the ban was lifted and political parties were permitted to organize and register with the Election Commission, prior to the planned return to civilian rule in 1986.

By January 1985 the following parties had registered:

Liberian Action Party (LAP): aims include freedom of press, speech and religion, accountability of public officials, and national economic reconstruction; draws support mainly from the middle classes, and receives financial backing from business interests; Leader TUAN WREH.

National Democratic Party of Liberia (NDPL): f. by Doe as vehicle for his presidential campaign; consists of Doe's governmental colleagues and draws support mainly from Doe's home area of Grand Gedeh and the Krahn tribe; Chair. KEKULA KPOTOE; Leader SAMUEL KANYON DOE.

The following parties were also active, but had yet to register with the Election Commission:

Convention Democratic Party (CDP).

Democratic Party (DP): Leader WADE APPLETON.

Liberia Unification Party (LUP): aims include free enterprise, natonal self-sufficiency in food, economic revival, freedom of press and speech; Leader GABRIEL W. KPOLLEH.

Liberian People's Party (LPP): f. by former mems of the Movement for Justice in Africa (MOJA), a pan-African political grouping active prior to the 1980 coup; Chair. DUSTY WOLOKOLLIE; Leader Dr AMOS SAWYER.

National Integration Party (NIP): Leader Dr E. SUMO JONES.

People's Liberation Party (PLP).

United People's Party (UPP): f. by former mems of the Progressive People's Party (PPP), a banned political grouping which led opposition during the last years of the Tolbert regime; Leader GABRIEL BACCUS MATTHEWS.

Unity Party (UP): Leader Dr EDWARD KESSELLY.

* In January 1985 these five parties were discussing the possibility of a merger in order to improve their financial position and their election prospects.

Judicial System

Before the military coup in April 1980, judicial authority was vested in the Supreme Court, the Circuit Courts, the Magistrate Courts and the Justice of the Peace Courts. A decree issued by the People's Redemption Council in April 1980 established a People's Supreme Tribunal, with limited powers, consisting of seven judges appointed by the PRC. In February 1982 it was renamed the People's Supreme Court, and its chairman and members became the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the People's Supreme Court. People's Circuit and Magistrate Courts were restored in May 1980.

Chief Justice of People's Supreme Court: EMMANUEL N. GBALAZEH.

ROADS

In 1981 Liberia had 5,412 km of public and private roads, of which 1,852 km were main roads and 1,325 km were secondary roads. Only 5.3% of the total network was tarred. The main trunk road is the Monrovia–Sanniquellie motor road extending north-east from the capital to the country's border with the Republic of Guinea, near Ganta, and eastward through the hinterland to the border with the Ivory Coast. Trunk roads run through Tapita, in Nimba County, to Grand Gedeh County and from Monrovia to Buchanan. Aid amounting to US $6m. has been promised by the EEC for completion of the Monrovia–Harper highway. The government allocated $92.2m. to road construction and development under the 1981–85 Development Plan. A bridge over the Mano river connects the Sierra Leone/Liberian road system. Studies for a Freetown–Monrovia highway, financed by the Federal Republic of Germany and the EEC, were completed in 1981, and work was started in October 1984. The Freetown–Monrovia stretch will eventually form part of the planned Nouakchott-to-Lagos highway. The total cost of the project is estimated at $145m.

SHIPPING

There are about 300 shipping companies registered at Monrovia. In 1979, 2,515 vessels were registered with Liberia, which has the largest merchant navy in the world (total displacement 81.5m. g.r.t. in 1982).

The port of Buchanan is run by LAMCO and is used for shipping iron ore.

LIBYA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya extends along the Mediterranean coast of North Africa. Its neighbours are Tunisia and Algeria to the west, Niger and Chad to the south, Egypt to the east, and Sudan to the south-east. The climate is very hot and dry. Most of the country is part of the Sahara, an arid desert, but the coastal regions are cooler. Average temperatures range from 13°C (55°F) to 38°C (100°F), but a maximum of 57.3°C (135°F) has been recorded in the interior. Arabic is the official language, but English and Italian are also used in trade. Almost all of the population are Sunni Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is plain green. The capital is Tripoli.

Recent History

Formerly an Italian colony, Libya was occupied in 1942 by British and French troops. Cyrenaica and Tripolitania were subsequently governed by the United Kingdom, while Fezzan was administered by France. Following a UN resolution in 1949, the country became independent, as the United Kingdom of Libya, on 24 December 1951. Muhammad Idris as-Sanusi, Amir of Cyrenaica, became King Idris of Libya. The country enjoyed internal political stability and good relations with both the Arab world and the West, though supplies of Libyan petroleum to the latter were restricted immediately after the 'Six-Day War' between Israel and the Arab states in June 1967.

The bloodless revolution of September 1969 brought a group of young nationalist army officers to power and deposed the aged King. The officers established a Revolution Command Council (RCC), with Col Muammar al-Gaddafi as Chairman, and proclaimed the Libyan Arab Republic. In June 1971 the Arab Socialist Union (ASU) was established as the country's sole political party.

Under Gaddafi, Libya assumed an active role in the Arab world. Various schemes for Arab unity led to the formation in January 1972 of the Federation of Arab Republics, comprising Libya, Egypt and Syria. In 1972 Libya concluded an agreement with Egypt to merge the two countries in 1973. Neither union was effective, and in January 1974 Col Gaddafi proposed a merger with Tunisia, which also proved abortive. The next scheme for union was with Syria in September 1980. This also is proving ineffective. An intention to merge with Chad was announced in January 1981.

In April 1973 Col Gaddafi introduced a 'cultural revolution', involving the formation of 'people's committees' and an attempt to run the country on an Islamic basis. Relations with Egypt, already tense following the failure of Libya-Egypt union, further deteriorated when President Sadat embarked on the October 1973 war with Israel without consulting Col Gaddafi. Relations with Egypt have remained strained since then, with an outbreak of border fighting in July 1977. Internal problems developed in 1975, with an attempted coup against Col Gaddafi. The General National Congress of the ASU held its first session in January 1976 and later became the General People's Congress (GPC), which first met in November 1976.

In March 1977 the GPC endorsed Gaddafi's plans to change the official name of the country to the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Power was vested in the people through People's Congresses and Popular Committees. The RCC disappeared, and a General Secretariat of the GPC (with Col Gaddafi as Secretary-General) was established. The GPC elected Col Gaddafi as Revolutionary Leader of the new state. The Council of Ministers was replaced by the General People's Committee, with 26 members, each a Secretary of a Department. Libya objected very strongly to Sadat's peace initiative with Israel in November 1977, and Tripoli was the venue for a summit of Arab 'rejectionist' states which immediately followed Sadat's visit to Jerusalem. Libya also strongly condemned the proposals for Middle East peace which were agreed by other Arab states at a summit meeting in Fez, Morocco, in September 1982.

In March 1979 Gaddafi resigned from his post of Secretary-General of the General Secretariat of the GPC to devote more time to 'preserving the revolution'. The General Secretariat of the GPC was reorganized, while the General People's Committee was also reorganized and reduced. The GPC was further reduced to 19 members in March 1982, but increased to 20 members in February 1984.

Although Gaddafi has continued to support the Arab cause and has condemned the Camp David agreements between Egypt and Israel, he has also concerned himself increasingly with African affairs, being accused of financing or directing subversive plots in a number of countries. He has interfered in the troubles in Chad, temporarily securing the survival of President Goukouni Oueddei's Government in N'Djamena during the fighting in late 1980. About 10,000 Libyan troops remained in Chad, however, and in October 1981 President Goukouni requested their removal. Libyan troops began pulling out in November and were replaced by an OAU peace-keeping force. In November 1982 the newly-installed US-backed President Habré of Chad insisted that Libya was still interfering in Chad's internal affairs, but Gaddafi denied the charge. In August 1983 Libyan aircraft supported the rebel forces of Goukouni in retaking the town of Faya-Largeau, in northern Chad, from Government forces. In response to a call for assistance from President Habré, France deployed 3,000 troops in Chad in August 1983. A defensive line across Chad at latitude 15° N, secured by French troops on behalf of President Habré, caused a military stalemate, and fighting did not break out in earnest again until the breakdown of peace negotiations in January 1984, after which French troops extended the defensive line 100 km northwards to latitude 16° N.

By April 1984, Libya was reported to have annexed the northern desert area of Chad and to have 6,000–7,000 troops in the region. Having secured the area around Aozou, to which it laid claim under the terms of a 1943 treaty, Libya appeared to have achieved its main objective and to have given up all pretence simply of supporting Goukouni's rebels. In May, however, Gaddafi offered to withdraw Libyan troops from Chad if France would, in turn, withdraw its forces. In September, without consulting the Government of Chad, a Franco-Libyan agreement was reached, providing for the evacuation of both countries' forces. In November it was reported that the joint withdrawal had been completed, though US and Chad intelligence reports maintained that some 3,000 Libyan troops remained in Northern Chad, a fact which Col Gaddafi subsequently acknowledged. In December 1984 President Mitterrand of France declined to intervene forcefully to remove Libyan troops from Chad, except in the event of their moving south of latitude 16° N.

Relations with the USA deteriorated in 1981. The Reagan administration had made plain that it objected to Libya's presence in Chad, and in August 1981 relations became even more strained when US fighter aircraft shot down two Libyan jets which had intercepted them over the Gulf of Sirte. In November the US oil company Exxon announced that it was closing down its Libyan operation (as, shortly afterwards, did Mobil), and in December President Reagan alleged that a Libyan 'hit-squad' had been sent to assassinate him. The discovery in February 1983 of an alleged Libyan coup plot against the Sudanese Government further soured relations.

With visits to Jordan, the Yemen Arab Republic, Saudi Arabia, Algeria and Morocco during the second half of 1983, Gaddafi seemed intent on ending Libya's diplomatic isolation, but there was no compromise on his support for Goukouni in Chad and for the Polisario Front in the Western Sahara, issues on which he had ignominiously failed to win backing at the OAU summit in June. Libya, with Syria and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, again found itself in a minority by dissenting from the decision, taken in January 1984, to readmit Egypt to the Organization of the Islamic Conference. Gaddafi has also been open in his support of the rebellion against Yasser Arafat's leadership of the Palestine National Liberation Movement (Fatah). In October 1984 Egypt unilaterally withdrew from the confederation agreement for a 'Union of Arab Republics', which it had entered into, with Libya and Syria, in 1971.

Two new ministerial posts were created at the ninth meeting of the GPC in February 1984; those of Secretary for Universities and Secretary for External Security. The specific functions of the latter post were not described, but its creation apparently represents a formalization of Libya's activities in attempting to silence opponents of the Gaddafi regime at home and abroad. Colonel Younis Bilqassim Ali was appointed to this post, and an office, attached to the Secretariat for Foreign Liaison, was also set up in early 1984 to 'combat international terrorism'. These moves and a crackdown on dissidents reflected Gaddafi's increasing sensitivity to the growth of opposition groups, principally the National Front for the Salvation of Libya (NFSL), which he accused foreign governments of fostering. A series of bomb attacks in the United Kingdom in March 1984, probably aimed at Libyan dissidents there, was followed by the killing of a policewoman by shots fired from the Libyan People's Bureau in London during an anti-Gaddafi demonstration. The UK broke off diplomatic relations with Libya in April. Inside Libya itself, in one of several such guerrilla operations during the first half of 1984, 15 NFSL commandos, whom Gaddafi accused the UK and Sudan of training, died in an attack on the Libyan leader's Tripoli residence.

In August 1984 Libya and Morocco unexpectedly signed a treaty of union in Oujda (Morocco). The proposed 'Arab-African Federation' of the two countries was approved by the GPC in Libya and by referendum in Morocco. Later, in December 1984, Libya and Malta signed a five-year security and military co-operation treaty which requires Libya to defend Malta if it is requested to do so by the Maltese Government.

Government

Power is vested in the people through People's Congresses, Popular Committees, Trade Unions, Vocational Syndicates, and the 1,112-person General People's Congress (GPC), with its General Secretariat. The Head of State is the Revolutionary Leader, elected by the GPC. Executive power is exercised by the General People's Committee, which comprises 20 Secretaries (the number having been increased from 19 in February 1984), each responsible for a Department. The country is divided into three provinces and 10 Governorates.

Defence

Libya's armed forces totalled 73,000 in July 1984. Military service is compulsory, and consists of a three-year period for the army and four years for the navy and air force. The army, which numbered 58,000 in 1984, is equipped with British and Soviet tanks, while France has supplied jet fighters for the 8,500-strong air force. The navy numbers 6,500. Libya's defence expenditure in 1982 was an estimated LD210m. In March 1984 a decision to discontinue military training for women was reversed.

Economic Affairs

Until several years after independence, Libya had to rely on aid from the USA, the United Kingdom and the UN to supplement an economy primarily based on subsistence agriculture, with some export of livestock, hides and skins, nuts and seeds. About 95% of Libya's land area is desert but, according to the Government, 66% self-sufficiency in wheat and barley is achieved. From 1955 to 1970 prospecting for petroleum yielded increasing returns, and Libya is among the major oil producers in the world. In December 1984, the Government reported a 25% increase in its oil reserves, following the discovery of oil fields believed to contain 2,849m. barrels of oil. In 1983 Libya replaced the UK as the largest supplier of oil to the EEC after Saudi Arabia. The initial expansion of Libya's petroleum industry was particularly rapid, owing to political stability, nearness to the Western European markets, and to the oil's freedom from sulphur, which makes it especially suitable for refining. In 1982, according to estimates by the World Bank, Libya's gross national product (GNP) per head, measured at average 1980–82 prices, was US $8,510, the highest level among African countries. It was estimated that GNP per head increased at an average rate of 4.1% per year, in real terms, between 1960 and 1982. Petroleum accounts for over 95% of export earnings, although it provides employment for less than 10% of the total labour force.

Libya also exports liquefied gas. In common with other oil-producing countries, Libya has signed participation agreements with some of the foreign oil companies operating on its soil, and, in some cases, has nationalized their assets. It has been in the forefront of moves to limit oil production and to secure higher prices for crude oil since 1973. Average daily oil production in 1979 was 2.1m. barrels, the highest annual level since 1973 (when production reached a record 3.3m. b/d), but production fell disastrously in 1981 and even further in 1982. At the end of 1984 oil production was of the order of 1m. b/d. The main reason for the fall was the lack of demand for Libya's relatively high-priced oil at a time of world surplus, and government revenues from the petroleum sector declined from the 1980 level of US $22,000m. to about $15,700m. in 1981, to $10,000m. in 1982 and to less than $10,000m. in 1983. At the end of 1982 Libya tripled its oil output from 600,000 b/d to 1.8m. b/d in an attempt to clear foreign debts. It insisted, however, that it had kept to its OPEC production quota of 1.1m. b/d for most of 1983, which, if true, represents a significant loss of income. In November 1984 OPEC responded to the oil glut on world markets by cutting 1.5m. b/d from its collective production quota. Libya's share of the reduction was 110,000 b/d, which (excluding military spending) could have wiped out an anticipated current account surplus of US $1,300m. Workers' committees are taking over both public and private businesses.

Cuts in development expenditure and the award of fewer construction contracts in 1983 showed the effects of reduced oil revenues on the economy. The 1981–85 development plan (part of a 20-year programme to reduce the economy's dependence on oil) projected average annual growth of 9.4%, though this did not take account of an inflation rate which was 10%–15% at the time of its launch and an estimated 30% in 1983. According to the Government, the contribution to GNP of the non-oil sectors of the economy rose from US $1,610m. (37%) in 1970 to $15,280m. (50%) in 1983. However, the level of spending envisaged in the development plan has had to be reduced, owing to Libya's poor recent economic performance. The value of Libya's exports increased from $4,017m. in 1973 to $21,919m. in 1980, but fell to $11,085m. in 1983. Government debts are estimated at $12,000m., and the practice of paying debts in oil has become more common. The development budget for 1984 has been reduced from LD2,370m. in 1983 to LD2,110m. Given the state of the country's finances, dwindling oil revenues and the reluctance of foreign banks to provide loans, there are doubts as to how the Government will pay for what is reputedly the largest contract ever awarded in the Middle East, worth $3,300m., but expected to cost perhaps twice that amount, which Libya signed with the South Korean construction firm Dong Ah in late 1983. Scheduled for completion in 1989 (though the early 1990s seem a more realistic date), the contract is for the manufacturing and laying of 2,000 km of pipe, ultimately to carry 5m. cu m of water per day from the south east, beneath the Sahara desert, to agricultural projects and towns on the Mediterranean coast. The second stage of what has come to be known as 'the great man-made river project' will pipe water from Sawknah to Tripoli, a distance of 400 km.

Since massive revenues from oil exports became available to it, Libya has been trying, unsuccessfully, to acquire nuclear technology and, it is feared thereby, the ability to manufacture nuclear weapons. The USSR has an agreement with Libya to build two 440 MW nuclear reactors for power generation and water desalination. In 1984, apparently dissatisfied with the standard of nuclear technology being offered by the USSR, Libya offered Belgian companies, principally Belgonucléaire, some US $1,000m. towards the cost of building the two reactors. Although Belgium assured worried Western governments that no technology would be involved that might assist Libya in the construction of nuclear weapons, it came under diplomatic pressure, particularly from the USA, to prevent the deal from going ahead.

Transport and Communications

Good main roads run along the coast, and inland from Tripoli to Sebha, the principal city of the Fezzan area, and from Tripoli to Ghat, on the border with Algeria. The Tripoli–Benghazi highway has been improved. The port of Tripoli is a natural deep-water harbour, and the ports of Benghazi and Tobruk are being improved. A new port, named Qasr Ahmed, opened in Misurata in June 1978. Tripoli and Benina (for Benghazi) are international airports, and there are plans to revive a railway system.

Social Welfare

The Government runs free health services, including two big hospitals in Benghazi and Tripoli. There is a scheme of pensions and national insurance. In 1980 there were 4,057 physicians working in Libya, and the country had 14,472 hospital beds, with a target of 23,765 in 1985. Low-cost housing is also provided. The 1981–85 development plan allocated $1,900m. to spending on the health services, but this has had to be reduced, owing to Libya's shortfall on oil revenues.

Education

Education is compulsory for children between six and 15 years of age. Primary education begins at the age of six and lasts for six years. Secondary education, from the age of 12, also lasts for six years, divided into two equal cycles. Libya also has institutes for agricultural, technical and vocational training. In 1980/81 there were 2,679 primary schools, with about 40,000 teachers and 720,000 pupils. There are universities in Tripoli, Benghazi and Mersa Brega. Adult illiteracy among the Libyan population averaged 61% (males 38.7%; females 85.2%) in 1973.

Tourism

Tripoli, with its beaches and its annual International Fair, attracts numerous visitors, while three ancient Roman provincial cities, Sabratha, Leptis Magna and Cyrene, are of considerable interest. Inland are the historic oases of Ghadames and Mizda. Libya received 126,000 foreign visitors in 1980.

Public Holidays

1985: 25 May (Sudanese National Day), 11 June (Evacuation Day), 20 June (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 27 August (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), 1 September (Revolution Day), 16 September (Islamic New Year), 7 October (Evacuation Day), 25 November (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1986: 28 March (Evacuation Day).

The Constitution

The Libyan Arab People, meeting in the General People's Congress in Sebha from 2–28 March 1977, proclaimed its adherence to freedom and its readiness to defend it on its own land and anywhere else in the world. It also announced its adherence to socialism and its commitment to achieving total Arab Unity; its adherence to the moral human values, and confirmed the march of the revolution led by Col Muammar al-Gaddafi, the revolutionary leader, towards complete People's Authority.

The Libyan Arab People announced the following:

(i) The official name of Libya is henceforth The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

(ii) The Holy Koran is the social code in The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

(iii) The Direct People's Authority is the basis for the political order in The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. The People shall practise its authority through People's Congresses, Popular Committees, Trade Unions, Vocational Syndicates, and The General People's Congress, in the presence of the law.

(iv) The defence of our homeland is the responsibility of every citizen. The whole people shall be trained militarily and armed by general military training, the preparation of which shall be specified by the law.

The General People's Congress in its extraordinary session held in Sebha issued four decrees:

The first decree announced the establishment of The People's Authority in compliance with the resolutions and recommendations of the People's Congresses and Trade Unions.

The second decree stipulated the choice of Col Muammar al-Gaddafi, the Revolutionary Leader, as Secretary-General of the General People's Congress.

The third decree stipulated the formation of the General Secretariat of the General People's Congress (see The Government, below).

The fourth decree stipulated the formation of the General People's Committee to carry out the tasks of the various former ministries (see The Government, below).

In February 1979 it was announced that the Secretariats were to be reorganized and their functions delimited. In March 1979, when Col Gaddafi resigned from the post of Secretary-General of the General People's Congress, the number of Secretaries of the General People's Committee was reduced from the original 26 to 21 and, in March 1982, to 19. Since 1979 progress has been made in furthering the spread of People's Committees in political and economic life.

Legislature

GENERAL PEOPLE'S CONGRESS

The Senate and House of Representatives were dissolved after the coup d'état of September 1969, and the provisional constitution issued in December 1969 made no mention of elections or a return to parliamentary procedure. However, in January 1971 Col Gaddafi announced that a new legislature would be appointed, not elected; no date was mentioned. All political parties other than the Arab Socialist Union were banned. In November 1975 provision was made for the creation of the General National Congress of the Arab Socialist Union, which met officially in January 1976. This later became the General People's Congress, which met for the first time in November 1976 and in March 1977 began introducing the wide-ranging changes outlined in 'The Constitution' (above).

Secretary-General: Muftah Usta Omar.

Judicial System

The Judicial system is composed, in order of seniority of the Supreme Court, Courts of Appeal, and Courts of First Instance and Summary Courts.

All courts convene in open sessions, unless public morals or public order require a closed session; all judgments, however, are delivered in open session. Cases are heard in Arabic, with interpreters provided for aliens.

The courts apply the Libyan codes which include all the traditional branches of law, such as civil, commercial and penal codes, etc. Committees were formed in 1971 to examine Libyan law and ensure that it coincides with the rules of Islamic Sharia'a. The proclamation of People's Authority in the Jamahiriya provides that the Holy Koran is the law of society. Committees are at work to ensure that Libyan law reflects the changes of the 1969 September revolution.

Supreme Court

The judgments are final; composed of a President and several Justices; its judgments are issued by circuits of three Justices as a minimum (quorum of three). The Court hears appeals from the Courts of Appeal in civil, penal, administrative and civil status matters.

President: Muhammad Ali al-Jadi.

Courts of Appeal

Settles appeals from Courts of First Instance; the quorum is three Justices. Each court of appeal has a court of assize.

Courts of First Instance and Summary Courts

These courts are first-stage courts in the Jamahiriya, and the cases heard in them are heard by one judge. Appeals against summary judgments are heard by the appellate court attached to the court of first instance, whose quorum is three judges.

Religion

ISLAM

The Libyan Arabs, practically without exception, follow Sunni Muslim rites, although Col Gaddafi has rejected the Sunnah (i.e. the practice, course, way, manner or conduct of the Prophet Muhammad as followed by Sunnis) as a basis for legislation.

Chief Mufti of Libya: Sheikh Taher Ahmed al-Zawi.

CHRISTIANITY

Roman Catholic Church: Apostolic Vicariates of Benghazi (15,000 Catholics, 1978) and Tripoli (30,000 Catholics, 1981).

RAILWAYS

Construction of a rapid transport system is expected to begin in Tripoli in 1986. Of a total length of track of 70 km, 20 km are to be laid underground. There are also plans for the first stage of a Libyan rail network, a 170-km line from Tripoli to Ras Ajedi.

ROADS

The most important road is the 1,822-km national coast road from the Tunisian to the Egyptian border, passing through Tripoli and Benghazi. It has a second link between Barce and Lamluda, 141 km long. Another national road runs from a point on the coastal road 120 km south of Misurata through Sebha to Ghat near the Algerian border (total length 1,250 km). There is a branch 247 km long running from Vaddan to Sirte. A 690-km road, connecting Tripoli and Sebha, and another 626 km long, from Agedabia in the north to Kufra in the south-east, were opened in 1983. The Tripoli-to-Ghat section (941 km) of the third, 1,352-km long national road was opened in September 1984. There is a road crossing the desert from Sebha to the frontiers of Chad and Niger.

In addition to the national highways, the west of Libya has about 1,200 km of black-top and macadamized roads and the east about 500 km. All the towns and villages of Libya, including the desert oases, are accessible by motor vehicle. Plans for the construction and renewal of about 8,000 km of paved roads were hoped to be realized by 1985. In 1984 Libya had 25,675 km of paved roads.

SHIPPING

Principal ports are Tripoli, Benghazi, Port Brega, Misurata and the Oasis Marine Terminal at Es-Sider. Port Brega was opened to oil tankers in 1961. A 30-inch crude oil pipeline connects the Zelten oilfields with Mersa Brega. Another pipeline joins the Sarir oilfield with Mersa Hariga, the port of Tobruk, and a pipeline from the Sarir field to Zuetina was opened in 1968. There is another oil port at Ras Lanouf, and a port is being developed at Darna. Libya also has the use of Tunisian port facilities at Sfax and Gabès, to alleviate congestion at Tripoli.

MACAU

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Capital

Macau comprises the peninsula of Macau, an enclave on the mainland of southern China, and three nearby islands, the two Taipa islands and Coloane. It lies opposite Hong Kong on the western side of the mouth of the Xijiang (Sikiang) river. The climate is tropical. The official language is Portuguese, but English and Cantonese are also widely spoken. The predominant religions are Roman Catholicism and Chinese Buddhism. The capital, the city of Macau, is situated on the peninsula.

Recent History

Established by the Portuguese in 1557 as a trading post with China, Macau became a Portuguese Overseas Province in 1951.

After the military coup in Portugal in April 1974, Col José Garcia Leandro was appointed Governor of the province. A new statute, promulgated in February 1976, redefined Macau as a 'Special Territory' under Portuguese jurisdiction, but with a great measure of administrative and economic independence. The 17-seat legislature, headed by the Governor, consists of six elected members, five appointed by the Governor and six chosen by business associations. Proposals to enlarge the Legislative Assembly from 17 to 21 members, thus giving the Chinese population a greater say in the running of Macau, were abandoned when they did not receive the approval of the Government of the People's Republic of China in March 1980. Upon the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Portugal in February 1979, it was announced that Macau would remain under Portuguese administration.

In February 1979 Col Leandro was replaced as Governor by Gen. Nuno de Melo Egídio, deputy chief of staff of Portugal's armed forces, who visited Beijing in March 1980. The Chinese Government has expressed no wish to alter the legal status of Macau, as was confirmed in June 1981 by the unopposed appointment as Governor of Commodore (later Rear-Adm.) Vasco Almeida e Costa, a Portuguese former minister and naval commander. Following a constitutional dispute in March 1984 over the Governor's plans for electoral reform, the Legislative Assembly was dissolved. Elections for a new Assembly were held in August, at which the Chinese majority were allowed to vote for the first time, regardless of their length of residence in the territory. Two of the six directly-elected seats were won by Chinese candidates, while the six indirectly-elected members, all Chinese, were returned unopposed.

Defence

The official Portuguese garrison has been replaced by the Comando de Forças de Segurança (Comforseg) of 1,800 men, which consists of a paramilitary force of about 150 men and the fire brigade and police force. Military service lasts for one year and is voluntary only for Chinese residents. The 1983 budget allocated 154,568,000 patacas to defence.

Economic Affairs

The principal economic activities in Macau are textile manufacturing and services linked with tourism. Production of clothing and knitwear reached 40,414 metric tons in 1983. Other industries, such as plastics, toy-making, electronics and precision instruments, have also been introduced in an attempt to diversify the economy. However, all development projects are hampered by the territory's chronic water shortage. Macau receives part of its water supply from China, and in June 1984 the territory's electricity supply was linked to a China-based source. The People's Republic was initially to supply 10% of Macau's power requirement, with the proportion eventually rising to 70%. Agriculture is of minor importance; some rice and vegetables are grown but most food is imported. An extensive land reclamation scheme is under way.

The lack of an effective taxation system has exacerbated economic difficulties and the pataca was unofficially 'floated' in 1975 after a HK $30m. loan was secured from banking groups in the province. In 1977 the pataca was linked to the Hong Kong dollar, rather than to the Portuguese escudo. Macau's own currency-issuing bank was opened in October 1980. In 1977 taxes on gambling accounted for one-third of total government income. In 1976 exports increased by 60% over 1975, giving Macau its first trade surplus for many decades. Merchandise exports showed an average annual increase of 29.7% in value over the period 1978–80. In 1983 exports of clothing and knitwear totalled 3,229m. patacas. Macau's principal trading partner is Hong Kong. Exports to the USA are of increasing significance. Macau's gross domestic product (GDP) was projected to be around US $1,000m. in 1984; per caput gross national product (GNP) in 1980 was estimated at $2,000. In 1982 the administration announced plans to expand telecommunications, housing, the textile and light industries, and tourism, and there are also plans to revitalize the banking sector and to develop Macau as an international financial centre.

Transport and Communications

The peninsula of Macau is linked to the islands of Taipa and Coloane by bridges, and in 1981 there were approximately 90 km of roads. There are sea-ferry, jetfoil and hydrofoil services to Hong Kong. In 1982 extensive plans to expand the province's communications network were announced, including the improvement of telephone services, development of the harbour and the construction of an airport (on reclaimed land between the islands). In May 1984 a new satellite ground station was inaugurated, establishing direct communications with Portugal, Japan and the United Kingdom.

Education

Schools are run by the Chinese, outside the Portuguese administration. The new University of East Asia was inaugurated in March 1981 and had 860 students in 1982/83. There are eventually expected to be 2,000 students. The medium of instruction is English, and the University is expected to cater largely for overseas Chinese from south-east Asia.

Tourism

Tourism is now a major industry. The main attractions are gambling, dog-racing and the annual Macau Grand Prix for racing cars, held in November. It is possible to visit China from Macau. The majority of visitors come from Hong Kong. More than 4m. tourists visited Macau in 1983.

Directory

The Constitution

The constitution of Macau is embodied in an organic statute of Portugal, published on 17 February 1976.

Macau, comprising the town of Nome de Deus de Macau (God's Name of Macau) and the Taipa and Coloane islands, has administrative, economical, financial and legislative autonomy.

The sovereign organs of Portugal, except the Law Courts, are represented in the territory by the Governor. In foreign relations and international agreements or conventions, Macau is represented by the President of Portugal who may delegate to the Governor if the matters concern the territory only.

The judicial power is independent and it is regulated by legislation enacted in Portugal.

THE GOVERNOR

The Governor is nominated after the local population is consulted, through the Legislative Assembly, and dismissed by the President of Portugal, to whom he is responsible politically. He has a rank similar to a Minister of Government in Portugal.

THE SECRETARIES-ADJUNCT

The Secretaries-Adjunct, up to five in number, are nominated and dismissed by the President of Portugal on the Governor's proposal. Each has a rank similar to a Secretary of State of Government in Portugal.

They exercise the executive powers which have been delegated by the Governor.

THE SUPERIOR COUNCIL OF SECURITY

The Superior Council of Security works in conjunction with the Governor who presides over it. It comprises the Secretaries-Adjunct, the Commander, Second-Commander and Chief of General Staff of the Security Forces, and three deputies elected by the Legislative Assembly. Its duties are to settle and to co-ordinate directives relating to the security of the territory.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

The Legislative Assembly comprises 17 deputies with a mandate of three years. Five deputies are appointed by the Governor from among residents of recognized reputation, six are elected by direct and universal suffrage and six elected by indirect suffrage.

The President of Portugal can dissolve the Assembly in the public interest on the Governor's recommendation.

THE CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL

The Consultative Council is presided over by the Governor and has five elected members (two elected by the members of the administrative bodies and from among them, one by organizations representing moral, cultural and welfare interests, and two by associations with economic interests); three statutory members (the Secretary-Adjunct for the Civil Administration Services, the Attorney of the Republic and the Chief of Finance Services); and two members nominated by the Governor.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Ordinary justice is administered directly from Portugal.

Under the superintendence of the Attorney of Portugal are the Delegate of the Attorney of the Republic, the Delegation of the Attorneyship of the Republic, the Services of Registries and of Notarial Affairs, the Judiciary Police, and the Cabinet of the Government's Juridical Consultation.

FINANCE

Money issue is guaranteed through the Issuing Institute of Macau, while the Government's banker of the territory remains the Banco Nacional Ultramarino.

The annual public accounts of the territory must be submitted to the judgment of the Administrative Law Court.

The Government

(February 1985)

Governor: Rear-Adm. Vasco Almeida e Costa.

Secretary for Administration: Adelina Carvalho.

Secretary for Tourism, Education and Culture: Dr Jorge Alberto da Conceição Hagedorn Rangel.

Secretary for Economic Co-ordination: Dr João António Morais da Costa Pinto.

Secretary for Social Welfare: Dr José Augusto Roque Martins.

The Cabinet comprises five secretaries who are appointed and relieved by the President of Portugal on the Governor's advice. There is a consultative committee of ex-officio and nominated members representing the Chinese community.

Legislature

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

The Assembly has 17 members: five appointed by the Governor, six elected directly and six indirectly. Members serve for three years. The Assembly elects its President from among its members, by secret vote.

Political Organizations

There are no political parties, but a number of civic associations exist. The three represented in the Legislative Assembly are: the Electoral Union (UNE), Pro Macau and Flower of Friendship and Development of Macau (FADEM). Other organizations include the Associação para a Defesa dos Interesses de Macau (ADIM), the Centro Democrático de Macau (CDM) and the Grupo Independente de Macau (GIMA).

Judicial System

Courts of First Instance. These administer the Legal Code of Metropolitan Portugal. Cases may be finally referred to the Court of Second Instance and the Supreme Court in Lisbon.

Religion

BUDDHISM

The majority of the Chinese residents probably profess Buddhism, and there are numerous Chinese places of worship.

CHRISTIANITY

The Roman Catholic Church

There are six parishes and three missions for the territory's 20,431 Roman Catholics.

MADAGASCAR

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Democratic Republic of Madagascar comprises one large island and several much smaller ones in the western Indian Ocean, about 500 km (300 miles) east of Mozambique, in southern Africa. The climate is tropical, but cooler inland. Temperatures in Antananarivo are generally between 8°C (48°F) and 27°C (81°F). On the coast the average daily maximum is 32°C (90°F). The northern parts of the island receive monsoon rains from December to April but the rest of the country is fairly dry. The official languages are Malagasy and French. Hova and other dialects are also widely spoken. An estimated 57% of the population follow animist beliefs, while about 40% are Christians and the remainder are Muslims. The national flag (proportions 4 by 3) has a vertical white stripe (one-third of the length) at the hoist and two equal horizontal stripes, of red and green. The capital is Antananarivo (formerly Tananarive).

Recent History

Formerly a French colony, Madagascar became an autonomous state within the French Community in October 1958, as the Malagasy Republic. In May 1959 Philibert Tsiranana, leader of the Parti social démocrate (PSD), was elected President. The country achieved full independence on 26 June 1960. Before independence, France encouraged the PSD, identified with the majority coastal tribes (côtiers), as an alternative to the more nationalistic highland people, the Merina, the traditional ruling group in the island. Conflict between these two groups underlies the island's recent history.

After 1967 the economy declined, and there was growing opposition to the Government's authoritarianism and subservience to French interests. In May 1972, following disturbances, President Tsiranana handed over full powers to the Army Chief of Staff, Maj.-Gen. Gabriel Ramanantsoa, who initiated a drive to 'Malagasize' education and industry. Parliament was dissolved, and the traditional rural assemblies of the Merina, the fokonolona, were revived and expanded to replace the French administration.

Opposition came from extreme left-wing elements, supporters of ex-President Tsiranana and côtiers who resented the domination of the new government by Merinas, and there was widespread discontent as a result of inflation, unemployment and food shortages. Although the elections to the People's National Development Council in October 1973 provided a clear victory for pro-government parties, the economic situation continued to worsen during 1974. On 31 December rebellious security forces attempted a coup and precipitated a crisis within the Government. On 5 February 1975 Gen. Ramanantsoa transferred power to Col Richard Ratsimandrava, hitherto Minister of the Interior. Six days later, however, the new Head of State was assassinated. On 12 February Brig.-Gen. Gilles Andriamahazo, who had been a member of the Ramanantsoa and Ratsimandrava Cabinets, assumed power, at the head of a National Military Directorate, and imposed martial law. All political parties were suspended.

In June 1975 the Military Directorate resigned after electing Lt-Commdr Didier Ratsiraka, a côtier and a former Minister of Foreign Affairs, to be Head of State as Chairman of the Supreme Revolutionary Council (SRC). In a referendum in December, more than 94% of the voters approved a new constitution, a Socialist Revolutionary Charter which advocated radical administrative and agrarian reforms, and the appointment of Ratsiraka as President of the Republic for seven years. The constitution altered the country's name to the Democratic Republic of Madagascar.

In January 1976 Col Joël Rakotomalala, a member of the SRC, was appointed Prime Minister, but the civilian element in the Cabinet was increased, and representatives of different regions and parties were included in the power structure. In March the Avant-garde de la révolution malgache (AREMA) was founded as the nucleus of the single national party, provided for in the constitution, and order was re-established. In July, however, Col Rakotomalala and the Army Chief of Staff were killed in a helicopter crash. The Prime Minister's death precipitated a series of conflicts which were halted only by the achievement of AREMA domination. The new Cabinet, formed in August under Justin Rakotoniaina (formerly Minister of Education), was composed of civilians who were committed to a more militant form of socialism.

Between March and June 1977, elections were held at all levels, resulting in overwhelming victories for AREMA. After the elections to the fokonolona and the Provincial Councils, the left-wing Mouvement national pour l'indépendance de Madagascar (MONIMA), led by Monja Jaona, withdrew from the elections and from the Government, and the party was proscribed. The Front national pour la défense de la révolution socialiste malgache (FNDR), of which AREMA is the nucleus, presented the sole list of candidates for election to the new National People's Assembly. Rakotoniaina resigned in July and was succeeded as Prime Minister by Lt-Col (later Col) Désiré Rakotoarijaona, a member of the SRC and a former Minister of Finance. A new Council of Ministers was formed in August, and new appointments were made to the SRC, which was extended to include leaders of the former political parties, and more côtiers, in an effort to restore political equilibrium.

However, political and social discontent was demonstrated by two alleged coup attempts in 1980, and unrest grew after the arrest of Monja Jaona in November. Although MONIMA agreed in March 1981 to rejoin the FNDR, and Jaona became a member of the SRC, riots and looting continued. A government reshuffle in January 1982, intended to restore public confidence, eliminated two moderates from the Council of Ministers. Several arrests were made after the discovery of a coup plot in the same month, and the economic crisis led to further disturbances in March and May. A presidential election was held in November, with President Ratsiraka and Monja Jaona as the only candidates. Ratsiraka was returned to office with 80.17% of the votes cast, although Jaona won 49.33% in the capital. Electoral participation was 86.61%. Jaona was dropped from the SRC in December, after calling a general strike in protest against the election results. Elections to the National People's Assembly, held in August 1983, were won decisively by President Ratsiraka's AREMA party, which received 65% of the votes and obtained 117 of the 137 seats in the Assembly. MONIMA again won considerable support in the capital, where it gained two of the eight seats. Social and political discontent continued in 1983–84: the Merinas, in particular, expressed open dissatisfaction with the Government's policies, and a series of alleged plots against the Government were uncovered.

Madagascar's foreign policy is officially non-aligned and, while it has close links with communist countries (particularly the People's Republic of China, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the USSR), its main trading partners are Western nations. Relations with France have been affected by disputes over compensation for nationalized French assets and over the continuing French occupation of the Iles Glorieuses, north of Madagascar, and three other islets in the Mozambique Channel. In 1980 the UN voted in favour of restoring all the disputed islets to Madagascar. However, France has continued to be Madagascar's principal trading partner and supplier of aid.

Government

According to the Constitution of December 1975, the supreme legislative authority is the National People's Assembly, with 137 members elected by universal adult suffrage for a five-year term. Executive power is vested in the President, as Head of State, who is elected for seven years by universal adult suffrage.

The President is also Chairman of a Supreme Revolutionary Council (SRC), an advisory body which acts as 'the guardian of the Malagasy Socialist Revolution'. The members of the SRC are chosen by the President, one-third of them from a list presented by the National People's Assembly. The President appoints a Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, the other members of the Council of Ministers. Local government has a four-tier structure, based on traditional village assemblies (fokonolona).

Defence

In July 1984 total armed forces numbered 21,100 men: army 20,000, navy 600 and air force 500. There is a paramilitary gendarmerie of 8,000. The defence budget for 1984 was US $55.7m.

Economic Affairs

Since independence, Madagascar's economic growth has failed to keep pace with the increase in the country's population, which averaged 2.6% annually between 1975 and 1980. According to estimates by the World Bank, Madagascar's gross national product (GNP) per head, measured at average 1979–81 prices, was US $350 in 1980, falling to $330 in 1981. GNP per head (at average 1980–82 prices) fell to $320 in 1982. Between 1960 and 1982, it was estimated, GNP per head declined, in real terms, by an average of 0.5% per year. During the 1970–80 decade alone, the average annual decline was 1.6%. The average increase in overall gross domestic product (GDP), in constant prices, was 2.9% per year in 1960–70, falling to only 0.2% per year in 1970–82.

The economy is principally agricultural, with 80% of the working population engaged in farming. Agricultural production provides the bulk of Madagascar's exports. The most important cash crop is coffee, which usually accounts for 40%–50% of the country's total export earnings. However, exports of coffee have declined rapidly in recent years, owing to aged stock, from 70,000 metric tons in 1981 to 46,000 tons in 1982. A scheme to boost production of coffee to at least 60,000 tons per year was launched in 1984, financed by a loan of US $35.5m. from France. Madagascar is the world's leading producer of cloves and vanilla. Cloves account for 25%–30% of total export earnings, and brought in $43.9m. in 1982. However, in 1983 Indonesia, the major export market, rejected Madagascar's price and suspended shipments of cloves. The resulting shortfall in export earnings was partially covered by an IMF compensatory finance facility of SDR 14.4m. During the 1970s output of vanilla fell from around 8,000 to 2,000 tons per year, owing to poor plantation maintenance and competition from synthetic substitutes. However, producer prices more than doubled between 1979 and 1982, and production is rising again. Other important export crops are sugar cane and bananas. Much of Madagascar's agricultural production is for subsistence, the major crops being rice and cassava. Madagascar was an exporter of rice until 1972, but since then at least 15% of domestic requirements have had to be imported. In 1982 rice imports totalled 350,000 metric tons and accounted for nearly 20% of the import bill. Madagascar's annual harvest of paddy rice declined from 2.1m. metric tons in 1980 to less than 2m. tons in 1982, but output recovered in 1983 to 2,147,000 tons, the highest level in recent years. However, the 1984 crop was likely to be lower, following extensive cyclone damage. In June 1984 the Government launched a three-year agricultural plan, which allocated $173m. to restoring rice output. Some $125m. was to be spent on developing new plantations, and the plan aimed to restore the country's self-sufficiency in rice by 1988. The plan also emphasizes livestock, which is allocated some $46m. Large herds of cattle are maintained, but they contribute little to the economy.

There are extensive mineral deposits, principally chromite (chromium ore). Other minerals include graphite, mica, quartz, celestine, phosphates, shale oil, bauxite, uranium and iron, but commercial exploitation is limited. The oil refinery at Toamasina, based on imported petroleum, has contributed significantly to exports since 1967. Contracts for petroleum exploration and exploitation, covering a total area of about 100,000 sq km (40,000 sq miles) off Madagascar's west coast, were signed with four foreign companies in 1982. Industry is confined largely to processing agricultural produce and manufacturing textiles. A hydroelectric power plant at Andekaleka was commissioned in April 1982.

For many years the economy was dominated by foreign business interests, but since 1972 successive governments have extended state control of essential sectors and have imposed strict controls on foreign-owned enterprises. There has been a serious drop in private investment from abroad since 1972, but foreign aid, mainly from France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the EEC, enables the economy to survive. Madagascar withdrew from the Franc Zone in 1973 but the Malagasy franc's fixed exchange rate against the French franc continued until April 1982. A devaluation of 15% followed in May. The balance of payments showed a deficit of US $168m. in 1983, and the budget deficit for 1985 was forecast at 68,500m. francs MG. Inflation rose from an annual average of 30.5% in 1981 to 31.4% in 1982, but dropped to 19.7% in 1983, while external debt has continued to rise, reaching $1,560m. by May 1984. In 1981 GDP fell by 9.2% in real terms, and in 1982 GDP was US $2,402m., which represented a further drop of 2% in real terms. However, GDP was estimated to have grown by 1% in 1983. The trade deficit grew from 40,300m. francs MG in 1982 to 70,000m. in 1983, but was forecast to fall to 26,100m. in 1984. In 1982 debt servicing payments totalled $94.4m., or 35.5% of export earnings, compared with 20% in 1981. In March 1984 Madagascar rescheduled part of its external debt and devalued the Malagasy franc by 15%. In the same month, the IMF approved a one-year stand-by arrangement for SDR 34m., while balance-of-payments support, totalling SDR 50m., was pledged by Madagascar's aid donors at an extraordinary meeting of the consultative group in Paris.

There are sporadic shortages of basic commodities, especially rice. Agricultural reform is a priority; the Government aims to continue the drive for self-sufficiency in food and the development of export crops, but the recession in world trade, low prices for export commodities, and a heavy import bill have dealt the Malagasy economy a severe blow.

Transport and Communications

The terrain is difficult, and transport is not well developed. There are 883 km (549 miles) of railway, all of which is narrow-gauge. Of the 14,597 km (9,070 miles) of national and provincial roads, most can be used only in dry weather. Most of the rivers on the island's west coast are navigable for about 160 km (100 miles), while on the eastern side the Pangalanes canal follows the coast from Toamasina to Farafangana. Madagascar's main ports are Toamasina, Mahajanga and Antseranana. The international airport is at Ivato, near Antananarivo, and there is an extensive internal network of air transport, which provides the principal means of long-distance travel, especially in the wet season.

Social Welfare

All medical services are free. The Government provides family allowances as well as benefits for industrial accidents and occupational diseases. Much welfare is offered by Christian missions. In 1978 the country had 749 state hospitals, with a total of 16,401 beds, and 811 physicians.

Education

Madagascar has both public and private schools, although a law passed in 1978 envisaged the phasing-out of private education. In 1975 an estimated 85% of children between six and 12 years of age attended primary schools but only 11% of those aged 12 to 18 received secondary education. There is one university, with six regional centres, attended by 21,000 students in 1982. The education system is being remodelled to suit local conditions and needs, but some reforms are causing controversy. Since 1976 six years' education has been officially compulsory.

Tourism

Plans to develop tourism, and to increase the number of tourists, proved over-optimistic. In 1980 about 13,000 tourists visited Madagascar and revenue from tourism was estimated at US $5m.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 16 May (Ascension Day), 26 May (Whitsun), 26 June (Independence Day), 1 November (All Saints' Day), 25 December (Christmas), 30 December (Anniversary of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar).

1986: 1 January (New Year), 28 March (Good Friday), 29 March (Commemoration of 1947 Rebellion), 31 March (Easter Monday).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 centimes = 1 franc malgache (Malagasy franc).

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = 738.3 francs MG;
US $1 = 637.0 francs MG.

Directory

The Constitution

The Constitution of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar was approved by referendum on 21 December 1975.

THE PRESIDENT

The Head of State is the President, who is directly elected by universal adult suffrage for a term of seven years.

THE SUPREME REVOLUTIONARY COUNCIL (SRC)

The Constitution defines the SRC as 'the guardian of the Malagasy Socialist Revolution'. The President of the Republic is Chairman by automatic right of the SRC, of which he names two-thirds of the members. He chooses the other members from a list presented by the National People's Assembly.

THE NATIONAL PEOPLE'S ASSEMBLY

Members of the National People's Assembly are elected by universal adult suffrage for a term of five years. The Assembly holds two ordinary sessions per year.

THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

The Council of Ministers is responsible to the President of the Republic, who appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers.

THE MILITARY DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

THE CONSTITUTIONAL HIGH COURT

The seven members have a renewable five-year mandate. For the purposes of local government, the country is divided into 11,393 fokontany (traditional village communities), 1,250 firaisam-pokontany (groups of villages, formerly sub-prefectures), 110 fivondronam-pokontany (prefectures), and 6 faritany (provinces). Each unit is governed by an elected council whose members must belong to the FNDR.

MALAWI

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Malawi lies in southern central Africa, with Zambia to the west, Mozambique to the south and east, and Tanzania to the north. Lake Malawi forms most of the eastern boundary. The climate is tropical, but much of the country is sufficiently high above sea-level to modify the heat. The official language is English, though Chichewa is being promoted as the basis for a 'Malawi Language'. Most of the inhabitants follow traditional beliefs. About 20% of the population are Christians (10% Protestants and 10% Roman Catholics). There is a Muslim community among the Asians, as well as a Hindu minority. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three equal horizontal stripes, of black, red and green, with a rising sun, in red, in the centre of the black stripe. The capital is Lilongwe.

Recent History

Malawi was formerly the British protectorate of Nyasaland. In 1953 it was linked with two other British dependencies, Northern and Southern Rhodesia (now Zambia and Zimbabwe), to form the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland. Elections in August 1961 gave the Malawi Congress Party (MCP), led by Dr Hastings Kamuzu Banda, a majority of seats in the Legislative Council. The MCP campaigned for independence and secession from the Federation. Dr Banda became Prime Minister in February 1963 and the Federation was dissolved in December. Nyasaland became independent, as Malawi, on 6 July 1964. Exactly two years later, in July 1966, the country became a republic, and a one-party state, with Dr Banda as its first President. In 1967 Malawi created a major controversy among African states by officially recognizing the Republic of South Africa. In 1971 Dr Banda became Life President of Malawi and the first African head of state to visit South Africa. In 1976, however, Malawi recognized the communist-backed MPLA Government in Angola and has since refused to recognize the independence granted by South Africa to four of its African 'homelands'.

Dr Banda rules Malawi firmly and tolerates no political opposition. All citizens must be members of the MCP. In March 1979 Dr Banda openly admitted that the letter bomb which injured the exiled leader of the Socialist League of Malawi (LESOMA), Dr Attati Mpakati, had been sent on his instructions. In recent years two of the three known exiled political groups which oppose the Malawi Government have been weakened by the loss of their leaders. Orton Chirwa and his wife, Vera, the leaders of the Malawi Freedom Movement (MAFREMO), were arrested in December 1981. Their trial began in July 1982, and in May 1983 they were found guilty of treason and were sentenced to death. They appealed against the sentence in December 1983 and February 1984, but both appeals were rejected. However, their case aroused international interest, and in June 1984, having received appeals for clemency from several heads of state and world organizations, Dr Banda commuted the Chirwas' sentence to life imprisonment. In March 1983 Attati Mpakati was assassinated while on a private visit to Zimbabwe, leaving LESOMA without a leader. It is not known who was responsible for the assassination, and a statement issued by the Malawi Government, in response to allegations by LESOMA, denied any Government connection with Mpakati's death. In spite of these events, political opposition to the Government by Malawi dissidents in exile continued during 1983, and in May the Save Malawi Committee (SAMACO) was formed in Zambia. The group claims that it is not another political party but a committee to unite all the forces opposed to the Malawi Government. However, SAMACO's attempts to achieve unity among the opposition parties have so far met with little success.

President Banda exerts firm control over his Government, and in 1980 two Cabinet members were dismissed for alleged breach of party discipline. In January 1982 the President extensively reshuffled his Cabinet, and reduced the number of Ministers. No political figure has been allowed to emerge as an obvious successor to the ageing Dr Banda. However, it was reported in 1983 that a power struggle had developed between Dick Matenje, then Minister without Portfolio in the Cabinet and Secretary-General of the MCP, and John Tembo, then Governor of the Reserve Bank of Malawi, concerning the eventual succession to Dr Banda. It was alleged by SAMACO that Dr Banda had called an emergency meeting of the MCP executive committee in May, at which he announced that he would take one year's sabbatical leave, following elections to the National Assembly in June. The President was said to have appointed Tembo to act in his place during his leave. Both allegations were denied by the Government in June. Matenje and three other senior politicians died soon after the dissolution of the National Assembly in May. Malawian exiles claimed that the four men had been shot while attempting to flee the country, as a result of the alleged power struggle, but the Government stated that they had died as the result of a road accident.

In spite of the political confusion arising from the deaths of the four politicians, the Assembly elections of June 1983 took place calmly. As in 1978, only members of the MCP were allowed to stand and all candidates were vetted by the President. Of the 101 elective seats, 75 were contested by up to five candidates each, while 21 candidates were elected unopposed. Five seats remained unfilled, officially because none of the candidates for these seats could pass the required English language proficiency test. Dr Banda appointed a number of additional members to the National Assembly in 1983 and 1984, bringing its total membership to 124 in 1984. The five vacant seats were to remain empty until by-elections were held.

During 1984 there were signs of continued political unrest. At the beginning of April Dr Banda dissolved the Cabinet and temporarily took over all the portfolios himself, giving no reason for his action. Shortly afterwards, he appointed a new Cabinet, which was largely composed of the former ministers, appointed to new posts. The appointment of Chakakala Chadziya, previously the Minister of Finance, as Governor of the Reserve Bank, replacing Tembo, signalled a decline in the latter's political career. In August 1984, following elections to the regional and district committees of the MCP, Dr Banda reorganized the party's executive committee. The party's Administrative Secretary and Treasurer-General both retained their posts, but the post of party Secretary-General remained unfilled, and Tembo was appointed only as an ordinary member of the committee. Dr Banda effected a minor Cabinet reshuffle in January 1985.

Dr Banda's policy of cautious liberalization, which began in 1977 with the release of nearly all political detainees and the invitation to foreign journalists to visit the country for the first time since 1973, continued when he allowed more than one candidate to stand in each constituency at the 1978 and 1983 elections. This was in contrast to the elections of 1971 and 1976, when all candidates were elected unopposed. Although overseas press coverage of the 1978 elections had provoked Banda to renew the ban on foreign journalists in August of that year, foreign journalists were once again permitted to enter Malawi in 1983 to report the June elections.

Malawi, both economically and militarily, lies in the South African sphere of influence. In 1973 about 123,000 Malawians worked in South African mines. Recruitment was banned in 1974 and, although this measure was reversed in 1977, only about 15,000 worked in South Africa by 1983. Malawi is a member of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC, see p. 205) and hosted its November 1981 meeting. Despite this support for a strategy to reduce the dependence of southern African countries on South Africa, Dr Banda supported neither Frelimo nor the Patriotic Front during their respective independence struggles in Mozambique and Zimbabwe, and it is alleged that the Mozambique National Resistance Movement has bases in Malawi. However, there was a slight improvement in relations with Mozambique in October 1984, when President Machel paid his first state visit to Malawi, and the two countries signed a general co-operation agreement, establishing a joint commission to regulate their relations.

Government

The Head of State is an elected President, whose term of office is normally five years, though Dr Banda is now President for life. Executive power is vested in the President, and legislative power in the unicameral National Assembly. The number of elected members was increased from 87 to 101 at the 1983 elections. Members of the Assembly are elected for five years. The President is empowered to appoint an unlimited number of nominated members. Cabinet Ministers, chosen by the President, are responsible to him. The country is divided into three Regions and 24 districts.

Defence

Malawi's defence forces numbered 4,650 men in July 1984. All services form part of the army. There is also a paramilitary force of 1,000 and a national police force totalling about 3,000 men. Estimated defence expenditure in 1984 was K23.35m.

Economic Affairs

Malawi has few natural resources. Agriculture, which employs 85% of the working population, mostly at subsistence level, is the mainstay of the economy, accounting for 40% of GDP and virtually all of exports in 1983. The principal agricultural products are tobacco, sugar and tea (which together accounted for 81% of export receipts in 1981). Other important crops are cotton, groundnuts and maize. Agricultural production continues to grow steadily, partly because Malawi has remained largely unaffected by the widespread drought in southern Africa, and the country is currently self-sufficient in food. Output in the agricultural sector increased by 5.9% in 1982, and by 3.2% in 1983. In that year the tobacco and sugar crops registered a significant increase in production over previous harvests. Total tobacco production rose to a record 72,200 metric tons with the burley crop reaching a peak of 41,500 metric tons, and the flue-cured crop reaching nearly 22,000 tons. Output of raw and refined sugar was estimated at 175,300 tons. In recent years, output of maize has also improved, and the Agricultural Development and Marketing Corporation (ADMARC), which buys most of the smallholder cash crops and surpluses for commercial sale, purchased about 246,000 tons of maize in 1982, and 245,000 tons in 1983. The high level of maize production in those years and in 1984 enabled Malawi to export maize to neighbouring countries for the first time in several years.

However, economic performance remains dependent on fluctuating commodity prices. The increase in tobacco production in 1983, combined with oversupply on world markets, led to reduced demand and lower prices. At least 40,000 tons of Malawi's 1983 burley tobacco crop were expected to have been sold by the end of the year, but in January 1984 strict controls were imposed to limit burley production to 25,000 tons in the 1984 season. By November 1984 this limit had already been surpassed, and the burley crop was estimated at 30,000 tons. However, prices for both burley and flue-cured tobacco improved during 1984. Total tobacco production for that year was estimated at 61,000 tons. Depressed world prices, combined with transport problems, have adversely affected the Malawi sugar industry in spite of increased sugar production in 1982 and 1983. In 1982 transport problems led to a restriction of sugar exports, creating a stockpile of 54,000 tons. This had increased to 93,000 tons by the end of 1983, and, in spite of government efforts to develop alternative export routes, the stockpile was expected to rise to 131,000 tons, worth about K32m., by the end of 1984. The real decline in wholesale prices for tea and tobacco from the peaks of 1977 has restricted the growth in total export earnings. Exports earned only K155.7m. in 1978, but had grown to K257.5m. by 1981, after an improvement in tobacco prices, and totalled K257.0m. in 1982. Earnings increased further, to K265m. in 1983, but it was hoped that improved commodity prices, and the devaluation of the kwacha in 1983, would raise this total to K325m. in 1984.

A 20-year National Rural Development Programme was launched in 1977. There are four main rural development projects which, together with a number of smaller ones, cover about one-fifth of Malawi's land area. The biggest is the Lilongwe Land Development Programme, begun in 1968, which aims to transform an area of more than 4,000 sq km (1,500 sq miles) into an agricultural and social base for 500,000 people.

The economy is hampered by a consistently adverse balance of trade. The lack of mineral wealth is a severely limiting factor. Although the presence of 20 types of minerals, including coal, bauxite and uranium, has been confirmed, none of these has so far been exploited on a significant commercial scale. The manufacturing sector, however, has made considerable progress since independence. In 1981 manufacturing contributed 12% of GDP, and construction a further 5%. Although manufacturing output dropped by 6% in 1982, the sector grew by 15.4%, in real terms, in 1983. Trade is mainly with the United Kingdom, South Africa, the USA and Zimbabwe.

Malawi's trade deficit of K30m. in 1977 was relatively low because of favourable commodity prices but, with prices stagnated, transport problems, an upsurge in imports (particularly of petroleum) and deterioration in the terms of trade, the deficit rose steeply to K143m. in 1979. By 1982 the deficit had fallen to K65m., mainly because of a decline in the value of imports. The kwacha was devalued against the SDR by 15% in April 1982, and again by 12% in September 1983, in an attempt to reduce further the trade deficit. However, the deficit rose to K97m. in 1983, and was expected to increase in 1984. In January of that year it was announced that the kwacha would, in future, be pegged to a 'basket' of currencies, instead of being linked to the SDR. This arrangement is aimed at modifying the impact of movements of the US dollar on the kwacha.

The annual inflation rate fell from a peak of 18% in 1980 to about 10% in 1981. During the 1970s GDP grew at an average annual rate of 6.6% but, because of adverse economic conditions, growth was less than 1% in both 1980 and 1981. There was some improvement in 1982 and 1983, when real GDP growth was about 3% and 4.9% respectively. In 1984 GDP was expected to grow by about 4% in real terms. Since 1980 Malawi has undertaken an economic stabilization programme, with support from the IMF, aimed at reducing the country's persistent balance-of-payments deficit. In September 1983 the IMF approved a three-year extended credit of SDR 100m. to assist the stabilization programme. The current balance of payments is projected to show a turn-around from a deficit of US $72.7m. in 1982 to a small surplus in 1986. Although the deficit on the current account of the balance of payments rose to $136.8m. in 1983, the position was expected to improve in 1984, as a result of increased foreign exchange reserves, owing to higher prices for tea and tobacco and to receipts from maize exports. In August 1984 Malawi obtained a compensatory financing facility for SDR 13.8m. from the IMF, in respect of the shortfall in exports in the previous year, and in September the Government announced that it would not be seeking a further rescheduling of the country's commercial external debts. In December 1983 the World Bank approved a second structural adjustment loan (SAL), for US $55m., to support a three-year programme which will emphasize agriculture, transport and industry, as well as mobilization of resources. A Five-Year Development Programme (1981/82–1985/86) aims to restore balance to the economy by increasing exports, decreasing imports and diversifying the economic base of the country by reducing the total dependence on tobacco, sugar and tea. The Government hoped to raise $113m. for the Programme at a donors' conference in Blantyre in February 1984. Malawi relies heavily on foreign investment and borrowing for development programmes.

Transport and Communications

There are 785 km of railways in Malawi, which are linked at two points to those of Mozambique. A 227-km line from Salima to Mchinji, on the Zambian border, via Lilongwe, built with Canadian assistance, was completed in 1980. There are plans to extend the line to Chipata, in Zambia, and it is hoped that the line may eventually link up with the Tanzanian-Zambian railway (Tazara). The rail route from Malawi to the port of Beira in Mozambique, which was previously Malawi's principal trade route, has suffered severe disruption from Mozambican insurgent activity. It is currently undergoing rehabilitation in a $200m. programme, scheduled for completion in 1986. In 1983 there were 10,772 km of road, of which 2,745 km were main roads. Construction of a 79-km road from Lirange to Zobwe, commenced in 1984, and in that year a 50-km emergency gravel road linking Malawi and Karonga (Tanzania) was completed. The road will offer Malawi a northern access route to the sea, via the port of Dar es Salaam. After 1965 Blantyre became a focal point for regional air services in southern Africa. Construction of a new international airport at Lilongwe was completed in 1981, and chartered international passenger flights commenced in November 1982. All international scheduled flights were to be transferred to the new airport.

Social Welfare

A social development agency, now part of the Ministry of Labour, was set up in 1958. Its work includes care and protection of young people, the destitute and the physically handicapped. The agency also has responsibility for probation work, sport, community centres and women's clubs. In 1981 Malawi had 121 physicians, among a total of almost 6,000 medical personnel. In 1980 there were 4,122 health institutions, of which 47 were hospitals, with 11,376 beds. The Ministry of Community Services initiates and expands welfare projects. Hospitals and health facilities are to be extended under the 1985–95 national health plan, compiled by the Ministry of Health. In May 1983 the International Development Association (IDA) agreed to lend Malawi some SDR 6.3m. towards the implementation of the plan.

Education

In 1981 about 47% of children between six and 13 years of age attended primary schools but secondary enrolment was equivalent to only about 4% of those aged 14 to 17. The implementation of the Fourth IDA Education Project has proceeded satisfactorily, and three of the five new secondary schools which were planned under this project were opened in 1983. In 1981, in a bid to improve the quality of primary education, the Government established the Malawi Institute of Education, where in-service training of primary school teachers and educational research are carried out. The Government intends to construct three new primary teacher-training colleges and to expand one grant-aided college with funds from the Fifth IDA Education Project. It is hoped that this will improve pupil/teacher ratios in primary schools by enabling more students to train as teachers. The University of Malawi has more than 1,600 students. Many students go to the United Kingdom and the USA. Education was allocated K21m. in the 1984/85 development budget. In 1966 adult illiteracy averaged 77.9% (males 66.2%, females 87.7%).

Tourism

Tourism was Malawi's fourth biggest foreign-exchange earner in 1983. Big game, fine scenery and an excellent climate form the basis of the country's tourist potential, and the tourist industry is expanding. A tourist corporation was to be established in 1982 to handle the expected increase in visitors after the opening of Lilongwe airport and three new hotels. In 1982 52,569 tourists visited the country, and tourism earned Malawi K10m.

Public Holidays

1985: 14 May (Kamuzu Day, birthday of President Banda), 8 July (for Republic Day), 5 August (Bank Holiday), 17 October (Mothers' Day), 25, 26 December (Christmas and Boxing Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 3 March (Martyrs' Day), 28–31 March (Easter).

Directory

The Constitution

A new Constitution was introduced on 6 July 1966, when Malawi became a republic. Malawi is a one-party state with a presidential form of government.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

Fundamental rights are guaranteed by the Constitution.

THE PRESIDENT

The President is both Head of State and Head of Government. He has the right to participate in parliamentary debates and may refuse his assent to any Bill; if the Bill is passed again within six months he must either assent or dissolve Parliament and thus submit himself to an election. Under a constitutional amendment made in 1970, Dr Hastings Kamuzu Banda was appointed President for Life on 6 July 1971. The Chief Justice is appointed by the President, as are senior civil servants and members of the armed forces. The President may proclaim a state of emergency. On the death of a President, the functions of that office will be performed by a Presidential Council comprising the Secretary-General of the Malawi Congress Party, as Chairman, and two Cabinet Ministers.

PARLIAMENT

There is a Parliament, consisting of the President and the National Assembly. The National Assembly has 101 elected members and an unlimited number of additional members may be nominated by the President. A Speaker is appointed from among the ordinary members of the Assembly. The Assembly may change the Constitution by a two-thirds majority on the second and third readings. All members must belong to the Malawi Congress Party. The parliamentary term is normally five years. The President has power to prorogue or dissolve Parliament.

EXECUTIVE POWER

Executive power is exercised by the President. Ministers are responsible to the President.

Judicial System

The Courts administering justice are the Supreme Court of Appeal, High Court, Magistrates' Courts and Traditional Courts.

The High Court consists of the Chief Justice and three puisne judges. The High Court has unlimited jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters. Traditional Courts established under the Laws of Malawi exercise civil and criminal jurisdiction over cases and charges involving Africans and, in other cases, non-Africans. Appeals lie to the District Traditional Appeal Courts and then to the National Appeal Court. Regional Traditional Courts are criminal courts of first instance and have no appellate jurisdiction. They hear only cases involving Africans, including cases of homicide and treason. Appeals from Regional Traditional Courts lie as of right to the National Traditional Appeal Court. Appeals from the High Court go to the Supreme Court of Appeal in Blantyre.

Chief Justice: James John Skinner.

Puisne Judges: R. A. Banda, N. S. Jere, H. M. Mtegha, L. E. Unyolo.

Religion

Most Africans follow traditional beliefs. Of the Asians in Malawi, over 50% are Muslims and about 25% are Hindus. There are also a small number of African Muslims. About one-third of the population is Christian, mainly Roman Catholics and Presbyterians.

Transport

RAILWAYS

Malawi Railways and the Central Africa Railway Co, its wholly-owned subsidiary, operate between Nsanje (near the southern border with Mozambique) and Mchinji (near the border with Zambia) via Blantyre, Salima and Lilongwe, and between Nkaya and Nayuci on the eastern border with Mozambique, covering a total of about 797 km. Malawi Railways and Mozambique State Railways provide the links from the Mozambique ports of Beira and Nacala to Malawi. There are plans to extend the line beyond Mchinji to Chipata in Zambia.

The line has a rail/lake interchange station at Chipoka on Lake Malawi, from where Malawi Railways vessels operate services to other lake ports in Malawi.

MALAYSIA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The federation of Malaysia, situated in South-East Asia, consists of 13 States, of which 11 are in Peninsular Malaysia, in the southern part of the Kra peninsula (with Thailand to the north and the island of Singapore to the south), and two, Sabah and Sarawak, are on the north coast of the island of Borneo (Kalimantan), bordering Indonesia. Sarawak also borders Brunei, a coastal enclave in the north-east of the State. The climate is tropical, with rain in all seasons and temperatures generally between 22°C (72°F) and 33°C (92°F), with little variation throughout the year. The official language is Bahasa Malaysia, based on Malay, but English is also widely used. Chinese, Tamil and Iban are spoken by minorities. Islam is the established religion, practised by about 50% of the population (including virtually all Malays), while about 25%, including most of the Chinese community, follow Buddhism. The Indians are predominantly Hindus, there is a minority of Christians among all races, and animism is practised, particularly in Sabah and Sarawak. Malaysia's national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has 14 horizontal stripes, alternating red and white, with a blue rectangular canton, containing a yellow crescent and a 14-pointed yellow star, in the upper hoist. The capital is Kuala Lumpur.

Recent History

The 11 states of Malaya, under British protection, were united as the Malayan Union in April 1946 and became the Federation of Malaya in February 1948. An armed communist revolt broke out in 1948 and was not completely suppressed until 1960. Malaya became independent, within the Commonwealth, on 31 August 1957.

Malaysia was established on 16 September 1963, through the union of the independent Federation of Malaya (renamed the States of Malaya), the internally self-governing state of Singapore, and the former British colonies of Sarawak and Sabah (North Borneo). Singapore left the federation in August 1965, reducing the number of Malaysia's component States from 14 to 13. The States of Malaya were designated West Malaysia in 1966 and later styled Peninsular Malaysia. Malaysia is a member of the Colombo Plan (see p. 116) and the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN, p. 106).

The general elections of 1969 were followed by serious inter-communal rioting, engendered by Malay resentment of the Chinese community's economic dominance and of certain pro-Chinese electoral results. The rioting precipitated the resignation, in September 1970, of Tunku Abdul Rahman, who had been Prime Minster of Malaya (and subsequently of Malaysia) since independence. The new Prime Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, widened the government coalition, dominated by the United Malays National Organization (UMNO), to create a National Front (originally comprising 10 parties, later increased to 11), which absorbed most of the former opposition parties. He also took measures to reduce racial tension. In January 1976 the Prime Minister died and was succeeded by the Deputy Prime Minister, Dato Hussein bin Onn.

In 1975 political stability was threatened by the resurgence of the communist guerrilla movement in Peninsular Malaysia. A number of emergency regulations were introduced but the Government was unable to prevent continuing terrorist attacks between 1976 and 1978. However, with co-operation between Malaysia and Thailand in military operations along their common border, communist insurgency has declined, although it remains a potential threat to the stability of the country.

In October 1977 the expulsion of the Chief Minister of Kelantan from the dominant Pan-Malayan Islamic Party (PMIP) resulted in violent political disturbances in the State and the declaration of a state of emergency by the Federal Government. Direct rule was imposed in Kelantan, and the PMIP was expelled from the National Front in December. In the federal and state elections of July 1978 Hussein Onn consolidated the position of the National Front, while the PMIP, in opposition, suffered a serious setback. In 1978, following the Federal Government's rejection of proposals for a Chinese university, racial and religious tensions re-emerged. Unrest continued in 1979, resurfacing in October 1980.

In July 1981 Hussein was succeeded as Prime Minister by Datuk Seri Dr Mahathir Mohamad, Deputy Prime Minister since 1976. Dr Mahathir called a general election in April 1982, seeking the country's approval for his policies, and the National Front won convincingly in all the states. Dr Mahathir has successfully overcome a number of political and economic setbacks during his term of office, and has strengthened his position of power. A five-month constitutional crisis was resolved in January 1984, when Parliament finally approved a series of amendments to proposed constitutional reforms. The Head of State, with the support of the other eight hereditary Sultans, had delayed signing the necessary legislation, following concern that the proposed changes would curtail the Sultans' power. Dr Mahathir suggested a compromise, which was eventually agreed. Although the matter aroused a considerable amount of public support for the Sultans and appeared to have brought Dr Mahathir some criticism, this was short-lived. There was public embarrassment during 1983 over a major banking scandal involving one of Malaysia's biggest banks, which was found to have made improperly large loans to a Hong Kong company which was subsequently liquidated. However, at the annual UMNO congress in May 1984, Dr Mahathir was re-elected unopposed as leader, and emerged with his political hold consolidated.

Since 1971 the Government has moved away from its previous pro-Western, anti-communist stance in international affairs. Malaysia has established diplomatic relations with its Communist neighbours, although it continues to oppose Viet-Nam's presence in Kampuchea and supports the government-in-exile of 'Democratic Kampuchea'. Malaysia has received a constant influx of refugees from Indo-China, particularly Viet-Nam, and throughout 1978 and 1979 the Government took firm measures to restrict the number of new arrivals. Refugee arrivals totalled more than 50,000 in 1979, but by 1982 the number had fallen to less than 15,000, many of whom have been resettled in other countries.

The United Kingdom's traditional commercial relations with Malaysia were broken between October 1981 and April 1983, following Dr Mahathir's 'buy British last' policy on official contracts. Factors behind the move were thought to include a change in London Stock Exchange regulations in September 1981, and an increase in the fees paid by foreign students studying in the United Kingdom. Normal links were restored after visits by several British trade delegations to Malaysia and an increase in financing by the British Government for Malaysian students. However, Dr Mahathir continues to pursue a policy of reduced dependence on the West and to look more to Japan and the Republic of Korea commercially.

Government

Malaysia is a federation of 13 States. The capital, Kuala Lumpur, is a separate Federal Territory. The Head of State, or Supreme Head of Malaysia, is a monarch, elected for a five-year term (with a Deputy Head of State) by and from the hereditary rulers of nine of the States. The monarch acts on the advice of Parliament and a Cabinet. Parliament consists of the Dewan Negara (Senate) and the Dewan Rakyat (House of Representatives). The Senate has 58 members, including 32 appointed by the Head of State and 26 elected by State Legislative Assemblies (two from each). The House of Representatives consists of 154 members, elected for five years by universal adult suffrage: 114 from Peninsular Malaysia, 24 from Sarawak and 16 from Sabah. The Constitution (Amendments) Bill 1983 increased the number of members to 176, to take effect at the next general election. The Head of State appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament.

Defence

In July 1984 the armed forces totalled 124,500 men: army 100,500, navy 11,000 and air force 13,000. Paramilitary forces comprised a Police Field Force of 12,000 men and a People's Volunteer Corps with more than 350,000 members. The Five-Power Defence Arrangement for joint consultations between Malaysia, New Zealand, Australia and the United Kingdom established a token Commonwealth force in Malaysia. Estimated expenditure on defence for 1985 was M $2,700m.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture, forestry, hunting and fishing together account for the most important sector of the Malaysian economy, and in 1984 employed an estimated 36.3% of the economically active population and contributed 21.3% of GDP. The most important commercial products of the agricultural sector are rubber and palm oil, and Malaysia is the world's leading producer of both commodities. The plantations of rubber trees and oil palms are mainly in Peninsular Malaysia. Production of natural rubber was 1,562,000 metric tons in 1983, when rubber contributed M $3,664m. to total export receipts, an increase of 38%, following a fall of 29% in 1982. Malaysia's output of palm oil has expanded rapidly since the 1960s to become one of the country's most important exports. Production of palm oil increased by 24.3% in 1982, while output of palm kernel oil grew by 35.3%, but in 1983 production of palm oil declined by 14.2%, while that of palm kernel oil rose by only 10.7%. Export earnings, which in 1982 suffered their first drop since 1976, recovered in 1983, when revenue from the two commodities was M $3,493.3m.

Malaysia produced 71.2% of its rice requirements in 1983, when production of milled rice fell by 2.9%, to 1.17m. metric tons, owing to floods. The introduction of high-yielding varieties of rice and improvements to drainage and irrigation have contributed to the drive to increase production, but in 1984, following the publication of the National Agricultural Policy, the aim of self-sufficiency in rice appeared to have been abandoned. Cocoa production, though still small, has the potential for increased output, and in 1982 rose by 30.1%. It remains vulnerable to fluctuating world demand, however, and in 1983 output fell by 2.5%, to 67,300 metric tons. Pepper is a significant export crop in Sarawak, where some 90% of Malaysia's output is grown. Production has been declining since 1980, because of depressed prices, and was estimated at 23,800 metric tons in 1983.

Logs and timber remain an important source of foreign exchange. However, lower world demand and efforts to conserve domestic resources have contributed to falling output. In line with a national forestry policy, introduced in 1978, measures to prevent rapid exploitation of forests have been undertaken, as well as plans for reafforestation. Since Janauary 1985 the Government has banned the export of whole logs from Peninsular Malaysia. Export earnings from sawlogs and timber fell in 1983 to M $4,146.9m. from M $4,546.7m. in 1982.

Malaysia is the world's major producer of tin, which is mined exclusively in Peninsular Malaysia. Owing to high world prices, exports of tin metal increased considerably in value to reach M $2,506m. in 1980, but earnings were lower in subsequent years (M $1,484m. in 1982 and M $1,718m. in 1983), owing to cut-backs in production. With the discovery of offshore petroleum reserves, Malaysia's production of crude petroleum rose by an average annual rate of more than 30% during the 1970s. Since 1980, petroleum has been Malaysia's largest single source of government revenue. It accounted for 24% of total export earnings in 1983, compared with 27.4% in 1982. Production of crude petroleum declined in 1980 and 1981, owing to the Government's oil conservation policy, but recovered to increase by 17.4% in 1982, owing partly to the operation of four new oilfields, and by 25.7% in 1983. Total output of crude petroleum was 14.5m. metric tons in 1982, and 18.3m. tons in 1983. Average production was 440,000 barrels per day (b/d) in 1984, compared with 381,000 b/d in 1983. The first shipment of liquefied natural gas (LNG) was exported to Japan in January 1983. All Malaysia's LNG output is exported; 1,690 metric tons were exported in 1983, and this was expected to have doubled in 1984. Other mineral resources include bauxite, copper and iron ore.

Manufacturing is playing an increasingly important role in the economy, accounting for 18.4% of GDP in 1983, compared with just under 18% in 1982. However, many manufacturing industries experienced a slow-down in production in 1981 and 1982. The processing of locally produced raw materials predominates. Other activities include the manufacture of textiles, electronic equipment, chemicals and machinery. The growth of these industries is helped by the Malaysian Industrial Development Authority, which offers tax and export allowances to encourage investment.

In 1982 Malaysia recorded its first ever trade deficit, of M $859.5m., following surpluses of M $505.6m. in 1981 and M $4,720m. in 1980. However, the balance of trade recovered quickly, and recorded a surplus of M $2,107.2m. in 1983. The value of exports rose by 16.8% in 1983 (compared with a rise of only 3.7% in 1982), owing mainly to an increase in volume, while imports rose by 4.5% (compared with 8.9% in 1982), owing to lower domestic demand. In spite of a continuing deficit on the current account of the balance of payments, which reached M $8,077m. in 1982 but moderated to M $7,120m. in 1983 and an estimated M $5,213m. in 1984, the merchandise trade account showed a surplus of M $1,411m. in 1983 and one of an estimated M $4,726m. in 1984, compared with a deficit of M $1,697m. in 1982. Malaysia's principal trading partners are Japan, Singapore and the USA, which in 1983 accounted, respectively, for 25.3%, 14% and 16.1% of imports, and for 19.7%, 22.5% and 13.2% of exports.

The annual growth of Malaysia's GDP, in real terms, reached 8% in 1980. The growth rate fell to 6.7% in 1981 and to 5.2% in 1982, but increased to 5.9% in 1983, and to an estimated 6.9% in 1984. Average annual inflation increased from 6.7% in 1980 to 9.6% in 1981, but fell to 5.8% in 1982 and to 3.7% in 1983. Unemployment was reduced from 7% in 1975 to 5.2% in 1982, but rose to 6% in 1983. The Fourth Malaysia Plan (1981–85) aimed to achieve an annual real growth rate of 7.6% and to keep domestic inflation between 6% and 7% per year. The Government's New Economic Policy, a 20-year programme begun in 1969, aims to increase the participation of the bumiputra (ethnic Malay) community in key economic sectors, to reach 30% of ownership of limited companies by 1990. By 1983 bumiputra ownership was 18.5%. Among the Government's efforts to vitalize the economy are the 'Look East' policy, which encourages emulation of the Japanese and South Korean examples of industrial development, and an attempt to increase the growth and importance of the private sector by the 'privatization' of several state-owned concerns, including television broadcasting, electric power and telecommunications. The Government was also concerned to reduce state investment and public expenditure, which had increased considerably during the Fourth Plan, and to increase the private sector's contribution accordingly.

Transport and Communications

Communications within Peninsular Malaysia are excellent, and there are frequent services by air and sea between Peninsular Malaysia and Sarawak and Sabah. Peninsular Malaysia's road system is extensive, and in 1983 covered a total distance of 25,637 km. The state-owned Malayan Railway had a total length of 2,215 km in 1982. The country has five major international airports and a network of airfields.

Social Welfare

Social welfare is the responsibility of two government departments, the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Welfare Services. Employers and employees contribute to the Employees' Provident Fund for retirement benefits. The independent Social Welfare Lotteries Board contributes large sums to welfare schemes. Government-sponsored social work among aged and disabled people is supported by many voluntary societies. Under the Fourth Malaysia Plan (1981–85), an estimated M $6,388m. was to be allocated to social services. In 1984 there were 88 hospitals, with a total of 35,562 beds, in the whole of Malaysia, served by 4,476 physicians. In 1985 government expenditure on health services was M $1,291m. or 4.5% of the total budget.

Education

Under the Malaysian education system, free schooling is provided at government-assisted schools for children between the ages of six and 19 years. There are also private schools, which receive no government financial aid. Bahasa Malaysia is the main medium of instruction. Primary education is also conducted in the Chinese and Tamil languages. Primary education begins at six years of age and lasts for six years. In 1984 2,146,099 pupils were enrolled at 6,527 primary schools in all of Malaysia. Secondary education, beginning at the age of 12, normally lasts for five years. Pupils who pass the Malaysian Certificate of Education examination at the end of secondary education may take a further two years' study, leading to a Higher School Certificate, allowing admission to university. In 1984 there were 1,069 government-assisted secondary schools, with a total of 1,227,487 pupils. There are also vocational and technical secondary schools which pupils may attend instead of the final two years of secondary education. There were seven universities in Malaysia in 1984. In 1985 government expenditure on education was M $4,743m., or 16.6% of the total budget.

Tourism

Malaysia has a rapidly-growing tourist industry, and the cultures of the many ethnic groups in the country provide a particular attraction. Some 2.7m. tourists visited Malaysia in 1983.

Public Holidays

Each State has its own public holidays, and the following federal holidays are also observed:

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 4 May (Vesak Day), 5 June (Official Birthday of HM the Yang di-Pertuan Agong), 20, 21 June (Hari Raya Puasa), 26 August (Hari Raya Haji), 31 August (National Day), 11 November (Deepavali)*, 25 November (Mouloud, Prophet Muhammed's Birthday), 25 December (Christmas Day).

1986: January/February† (Chinese New Year).

* Except Sabah and Sarawak.

Weights and Measures

In 1972 a 10-year programme of conversion from the imperial system to the metric system began. There is also a local system of weights and measures:

1 cupak = 1 quart (1.1365 litres)
1 gantang = 1 gallon (4.5461 litres)
1 tahil = 1⅓ ounces (37.8 grammes)
16 tahils = 1 kati = 1⅓ lb (604.8 grammes)
100 katis = 1 picul = 133⅓ lb (60.48 kg)
40 piculs = 1 koyan = 5,333⅓ lb (2,419.2 kg)

The Constitution

The Constitution of the Federation of Malaya became effective at independence on 31 August 1957. As subsequently amended, it is now the Constitution of Malaysia. The main provisions are summarized below.

SUPREME HEAD OF STATE

The Yang di-Pertuan Agong (King or Supreme Sovereign) is the Supreme Head of Malaysia.
